TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

DASHES HERE AND THERE BY TIMES REPORTERS.

Peterboro Well Thought of

Mr. A. R. Miranda, who is calling on the local merchants in the interests of the Antiseptic Ad. Co., thinks that Peterborough is a go-ahead place. He has recently been at Stratford, London, Woodstock, and other western towns and says there is an overflow of transient people in them, but that Peterborough's hustle is well assured. He thinks George street presents a scene of lively business creditable to any city of five times our population.

Latest Souvenir Cards

New souvenir cards with choice of flower design, maple leaf or coat of arms with streamer attached containing view of George Street, Victoria Park, Jackson Park, Little Lake Cemetery, Post Office, Nicholl's Hospital George Street Methodist Church and St John's Church, indorsed "Greetings from Peterborough, Ont." in tissue envelope for mailing, only five cents each. Times Bookstore.

Bunton was Remanded

Yesterday afternoon High County Constable Geo. Cochrane brought to the city Chas. H. Bunton, who it is alleged stole from the trouser's pockets of Chas. Payne, a North Monaghan farmer, the sum of thirty dollars. Bunton came before County Magistrate Edmison yesterday afternoon at three o'clock, and pleaded not guilty. He was remanded until next Friday for trial.

P. C. McDonald in the City

P. C. McDonald who is off on a well earned holiday and who has been hauling out dunge and bass at Buckhorn, was in the city yesterday. This stalwart constable when asked by a Times representative, "How long do your holidays last," replied, "Let me alone. Don't let the newspapers bother me. I intend to get a lunge or two before I go back to duty and then its up to me to forget sport and look after the city's work." We think Mac.'s argument is good.

New President Elected

At a recent meeting of the George street Methodist Epworth League, Mr. Garnet Gilley, was elected president Rev. Mr Pearson occupied the chair and a devotional meeting was held. Miss Ethel Miller read an instructive paper on "Duties of the Day." Mr. Cain, formerly president of the league, is leaving the city, and a new president had to be elected. Mr. Galley was the unanimous choice.

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the stomach, etc.

City Topics

IN SHORT FORM FOR BUSY READERS

—The Fire, Water & Light Committee met last night.

—A door key found Sunday at the C. P. R. station is at Mr. M. Pappas' cigar store, 337 George street.

—The Board of Works will probably meet this afternoon at four o'clock and make a general tour of inspection of the city work.

—There is no truth that one of the city schools is to be used as a temporary isolation hospital for smallpox, scarlet fever and sich.

—The work of excavating for the foundation of the new All Saints' church on Rubidge street, was begun yesterday morning.

—The prayer meetings at Bethany Tabernacle for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit will be continued every night this week, except Saturday.

—Mr. Richard Sheehy, contractor, of this city, has a gang of men at the Stony Lake quarries, where they are securing stone to be used in fulfillment of the contracts undertaken by Mr Sheehy.

—A meeting of St. John's Young People's Association, was held Monday night, when it was decided to hold a meeting of the executive at the home of Mr R. J. Devey, on Friday night at 8.30 o'clock, to arrange for the season's work.

—It now seems imperative, owing to existing conditions when a contagious disease patient is brought to the very central part of the city, that either a tent or an isolation hospital be procured with the least delay.

—Mr. Geo. Jobbitt, conductor of the express running between Lakefield and Lindsay, has resumed his duties after a two weeks' holiday, Conductor H. Bush, who relieved during Mr. Jobbitt's absence has returned to Lindsay to resume his regular position.

—A meeting of the Central Ontario Life Underwriters' Association was to have been held Monday evening to hear reports from the delegates who attended the recent convention in Toronto. Owing to the small attendance no business was done. A special meeting will be called next week, when reports will be presented.

The bandsmen of the 57th Regiment whilst not afraid and, in fact eager to meet human foes in battle, are "leary" about meeting the insidious scarlet fever bacteria and have left their former practice rooms in the city building as the Board of Health, in their wisdom, have for lack of other accommodation or an isolation hospital have placed a contagious diseased lady in this central position of the city.

Canadian Club for Peterboro

A meeting of the committee in charge of the work of arranging for an organization meeting of a Canadian Club in Peterborough, was held Monday The reports given were most encouraging, and a plan was decided upon for a canvass for members, and following which a general meeting will be called.

RACE HORSES THE FASTEST.

Nature Student Gives Figures Showing How Fast Animals Are.

Ernest Thompson says: The speed of the coyote is great, and has often been the subject of admiring comment, but I think it has been overrated. After collecting data of various kinds, such as actual known records of dogs and horses, also the comparative records of dogs and hares, or horses and foxes, wolves and hounds, hounds and automobiles, I have attempted a scale of comparative speeds:

	Min.	Sec.
Blooded race horses covers a mile in about	1	40
Pronghorned antelope	1	50
First-class greyhound	2	0
Jack rabbit	2	10
Common fox	2	20
Northern coyote	2	30
Foxhound	2	40
American gray wolf	3	0

Many hunters would set the kit fox or swift above the greyhound, especially for a short race, but I have had no personal experience with the species in a chase. The little prairie critter, I believe, get away from the swift in a hundred-yard dash; they cannot keep it up for long, but their initial velocity is incredible, and baffles the eye. Not a leg, not a rabbit is to be seen; nothing but a white streak across the prairie, till it promptly disappears in some burrow.

What actually counts in the race is, as usual, the trifle more speed that each animal can command.

Coyote is Faster.

For example, the gray wolf makes 650 yards to the minute, and the coyote about 700. But that 50 yards makes all the difference between living and dying. That 50 yards margin is probably the foothold on which the whole coyote race has been built up.

It is a well-known principle that the special development of an animal is its most variable part. Thus the peculiar bell in the throat of a moose varies enormously, the bill of the long-billed curlew, the neck feather of the ruff, the spots of the ocelot, the white bands of the skunk, the horns of the elk, are so varied that rarely two are found just alike. Speed is one of the peculiarities of the coyote, as it is of the greyhound, and we must, therefore, look for great variations of rate. I have selected an average for my calculations, but there are occasional individuals, coyotes of rare gifts, whose speed and endurance would put them very near the top of our scale.

IMMIGRATION FALLING OFF.

Decrease Reported in Number From the United States.

Immigration from the United States into Canada continues to decrease. The returns for April and May show the total number reported as crossing at all frontier points as 18,525, as compared with 19,710 in the same months of 1906, a decrease of 16 per cent. At the ocean ports there was an increase of 30 per cent.—namely, 73,193 for the two months this year against 52,794 in the same months of 1906.

Reports from the Canadian agents in various parts of the United States in reference to the falling off show that immense tracts of good land in Texas and other states are being offered for settlement at lower prices than they can be obtained in the Canadian northwest, where the railway and other facilities are as favorable as they are on the other side of the line.

The high prices at which the fertile lands of the Canadian northwest are held by speculators is giving an advantage to the holders of American unoccupied farming areas, which as a natural consequence is calculated to still further divert the volume of American settlers from the Canadian to the United States west.

A Buried City.

A Canadian archaeologist, who has for some time been engaged in excavation work on the site of some ancient buildings in Texas, announces that he has, as the result of his labors, discovered the undoubted traces of a large city of great antiquity. There is conclusive proof that the city flourished at a period anterior to the Aztec epoch. The ruins are at a considerable depth below the surface, and little information is yet to be obtained. The Aztecs were the people whom the Spaniards found in Mexico, and there is evidence that they displaced a former race, the Toltecs at an early period. But long before the times of Cortes there had been successive waves of population that had spread over North and South America. Leaving out the Eskimos of the Polar regions, the primitive Americans are generally regarded as of one race, the earliest settlers coming from Asia. It has been suggested that America and Asia were in those pre-historic times connected by an isthmus where there is now the Behring Straits. What was remarkable about the Toltecs and Aztecs was the high degree of civilization to which they had risen, and such civilization is in itself proof of a long period of development. To the elucidation of this long story a buried city may materially contribute.

Ontario Government Prizes.

The Ontario Government are offering special prizes in the Natural History Department at the Canadian National Exhibition for the best collection of insects injurious to horticulture; for a collection illustrating the effects of fungoid disease upon cultivated plants, and for the best exhibit of woods and leaves from the forest trees of Canada. Prizes of $30 will be given in each section.

Bluebirds.

Breathless they stood at last upon the towering Adirondack peak.

"There," she said angrily, "we have climbed all this distance to admire the beauties of nature, and we left the glass at home."

Tranquilly smiling, he shifted the lunch basket to the other arm.

"Never mind, dear," he said. "It won't hurt us just this once to drink out of the bottle."

Prominent Editor to Speak

It seems that a member of the 4th estate, a newspaper man, Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, will be the speaker, when the local Presbyterians, members of St. Paul's, St Andrew's, and Knox churches meet towards the latter part of October The subject to be taken up by this talented author and speaker will be "The Laymen's Movement in the Church." It is likely that the banquet will be held in St Andrew's lecture room, with Mr. G. M. Roger in the chair.

Cures Woman's Weaknesses.

We refer to that boon to weak, nervous, suffering women known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Dr. John Fyfe one of the Editorial Staff of THE ECLECTIC MEDICAL REVIEW says of Unicorn root (Helonias Dioica) which is one of the chief ingredients of the "Favorite Prescription":

"A remedy which invariably acts as a uterine invigorator * * * makes for normal activity of the entire reproductive system." He continues "in Helonias we have a medicament which more fully answers the above purposes than any other drug with which I am acquainted. In the treatment of diseases peculiar to women it is seldom that a case is seen which does not present some indication for this remedial agent." Dr. Fyfe further says: "The following are among the leading indications for Helonias (Unicorn root). Pain or aching in the back, with leucorrhoea; atonic (weak) conditions of the reproductive organs of women, mental depression and irritability, associated with chronic diseases of the reproductive organs of women; constant sensation of heat in the region of the kidneys; menorrhagia (flooding), due to a weakened condition of the reproductive system; amenorrhoea, suppressed or absent monthly periods, arising from or accompanying an abnormal condition of the digestive organs and Anaemic (thin blood) habit; dragging sensations in the extreme lower part of the abdomen."

If more or less of the above symptoms are present, no invalid woman can do better than take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, one of the leading ingredients of which is Unicorn root, or Helonias, and the medical properties of which it most faithfully represents.

Of Golden Seal root, another prominent ingredient of "Favorite Prescription," Prof. Finley Ellingwood, M. D., of Bennett Medical College, Chicago, says:

"It is an important remedy in disorders of the womb. In all catarrhal conditions * * * and general enfeeblement, it is useful."

Prof. John M. Scudder, M. D., late of Cincinnati, says of Golden Seal root:

"In relation to its general effects on the system, there is no medicine in use about which there is such general unanimity of opinion. It is universally regarded as the tonic useful in all debilitated states."

"Valuable in uterine hemorrhage, menorrhagia (flooding) and congestive dysmenorrhoea (painful menstruation)."

Claimed Wrong Wheel in Mistake

Yesterday a well known local citizen, who some days ago had his bicycle stolen from in front of his place of business, was advised that the stolen bike was at the police station. The W. L. C. hastened to the station and took a wheel stored there, as "found" to the pavement. Before mounting it to ride away, some one present asked the robbed one, "What was the number of the wheel you lost?" As the man who had lost a wheel was searching through his pockets to find a memo he had made of the number of his lost bicycle, one of those present ascertained that the number of the reclaimed wheel was, say, 220,477. As we forget the number when the claimant of the wheel yesterday discovered the memo giving the right number of the wheel lost, he quickly saw that he was innocently claiming another man's property. Of course the whole matter was a mistake, as the gentleman referred to coul dbuy a whole police station full of wheels, but an audible smile went round as he surrendered the wheel he had claimed. The wheel at the station and this one lost were of similar make and appearnce, but the infallible test of number told the story.

AGNES THOMAS ACQUITTED BUT HER THREE ASSAILANTS GET EIGHT MONTHS EACH

Chief Justice Mulock Said They Acted Illegally and Unmanly

Awful Deed of Insane Man

Edmundston, N.B., Sept. 18. — A Baker Lake farmer, who suddenly went insane today, struck his four-year-old daughter with a piece of wood, killing her instantly. His wife and two men, who were present, were unable to overpower the man. Later on he was lodged in jail, and while there attacked and nearly murdered another prisoner.

End of Wiarton Tragedy

The Woman Burst Into Tears When the Verdict was Given

Walkerton, Sept. 18.—After being out for an hour and a half the jury in the case of the Crown vs. Mrs. Agnes Thomas, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Philip Gilbert at Wiarton, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

Mrs. Thomas burst into tears when the verdict was announced.

Chief Justice Mulock expressed the hope that the tragic nature of the incident would cause her to lead a better life.

John Lancaster, William Lancaster and Walter Lancaster, charged with unlawful assembly and rioting, and who pleaded guilty yesterday, were each sentenced to eight months in the common jail.

In addressing the prisoners the judge referred to the seriousness of the offence.

He styled the attack on the two women as not only illegal but unmanly.

The sentence of the Wiarton men was a source of much surprise. Nothing of the kind had been anticipated. The prisoners themselves seemed almost stunned by his lordship's decision.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

After hearing Chief Justice Mulock's charge, the jury retired at 10.30.

"It is commonly said," remarked his lordship, "that a man's house is his castle, and that he may kill persons entering forcibly without his permission, but that is altogether too broad an interpretation of the law. No man is justified in shooting another unless he fully believes his life or the life of some inmate of his house to be in danger. If Mrs. Thomas had reasonable grounds to fear bodily harm at the hands of her assailants, her case should not be prejudiced by the manner of woman she was. The fact that she was there for immoral purposes has nothing to do with the case except as affecting the credibility of the witness."

A Dutch South Africa Soon

London, Sept. 18.—The Capetown parliament will be dissolved today. A continuance of the councils blocking of supplies creating a constitutional crisis.

It is probable the regained votes of the rebels disfranchised after the war will be sufficient to let Jamieson's party and South Africa will be politically Dutch from Rhodesia to Table Bay.

The elections to the legislative council occur in November and House of assembly in February.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Denounces the Japanese Riots

Ottawa, Sept. 19—The government has been in communication all the week with the British Columbia authorities on the anti-Japanese outbreaks on the coast. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has held conferences with representatives of the anti-Japanese element of the province on the one hand and of the Japanese government on the other, with the result that the provincial administration has been notified it is held responsible for full protection to the Japanese. The sufferers by mob violence will be compensated for personal injuries and damages to property.

It was pointed out that it was only the right of the Japanese under the treaty between Canada and Japan, consented to by Great Britain, to reside in Canada and to prosecution in all peaceful pursuits. Sir Wilfrid Laurier maintains the position he took at the time of the treaty, that close trade relations between Canada and Japan are desirable in the interest of the Dominion at large, and that British Columbia will benefit more than any of the other provinces.

He looks upon Japan as a civilized nation, an ally of the empire, and a power friendly to Canada, with it will be of advantage to remain on the best of terms.

The opposition to the Japanese on the coast is dictated by labor agitators for the purpose of keeping up wages and the exclusive employment of whites by barring out the Japs and all other Asiatics, while at the same time sufficient white labor for the demands of the country is not obtainable at any price. The declaration of the British Columbia members of the house of commons, Macpherson and Galliher, who came over [illegible] Sir Wilfrid, that the Japs will be kept out "at all hazards," is rubbish.

SHORTAGE IN GRAIN CROPS.

One hundred million dollars will scarcely cover the loss in the value of eastern and central Canada's agricultural products this year, compared with last. The shortage in Ontario alone is estimated by Provincial Jame[illegible] MacEwen of the Provincial Farmers' association as equal to $80,000,0000. In the northwest, however, while there is a short yield per acre of a third or a fourth in some districts and less or more in others, with variations in qualities, superior in some places and inferior in others, the [illegible] and to more than compensate for every possible loss in yield per acre and depreciation in quality, while the net income to the farmer per bushel is expected to be larger.

FUNDS FOR TREASURY.

Public ownership dues on mining, otherwise "royalties" received by the provincial government from the Cobalt silver camp, so far amount to $1,467,850. This goes intact into the provincial treasury. The net earnings from the government railway in the province and the dues received on logs for export cut on the timber limits held under lease, added to the proportion of the above mining royalties chargeable to the present year, will bring up the total receipts for 1907 from public ownership to upwards of $2,000,000, which will be largely increased in 1908.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has decided to introduce legislation at the next session of parliament to increase the grants to the improvement commission, which is converting the capital into a Washington of the north.

Conservatives of the West Demand Big Convention

Winnipeg, Sept. 18.—Mr. R. L. [illegible] opposition, spent the day in Winnipeg, and was in conference most of the time with leaders of the party in Winnipeg and Manitoba. It is understood that a petition was presented to Mr Borden, demanding that he call a big Conservative convention to draw up a progressive and advanced platform.

Scalp Torn From Head

Chatham, Sept. 18.—Ada Shaw, 15 years of age, met with a terrible accident while at work at the Knit Canning Works today.

While passing close to a belt her hair was caught in a rapidly revolving wheel, which tore her scalp completely from her head.

She was at once taken to the office of a surgeon, where the scalp was thoroughly cleansed, and placed on the head again, though it is thought unlikely it will grow again.

The Bridge Shook As Riveter Pounded --Saw Many Defects

Quebec, Sept. 18.—Four witnesses were heard yesterday in the hospital, by the royal commission on the bridge collapse. J. Delph Lajeunesse was on the shore side of chord No. 9 when the bridge fell. It seemed to him at first that the traveller was falling, and after feeling the dock he had time to see that the traveller was still on the bridge before it fell, and he fell with it.

Lakeuneuse had seen the curve on the chord and had noticed that four of the plates on it were cracked. He is suffering from a fractured leg.

Alex. Beauvis, a Caughnawaga Indian, went down with chord No. 9. Being incased in it he has a broken leg and nose. He had noticed that the compressed air machine used in riveting, which was almost completed, was so powerful that it shook the whole structure and he had called Mr. Meredith's attention to the fact as well as to the bad rivets.

Oscar Labarge was working on top of the traveler, 400 feet above the water, when the collapse occurr d. He gave a graphic description of his experience in the water and his escape therefrom on floating planks.

Charles Davis was working at the last section erected. The bridge seemed to give way from the back and he went down all together. He had seen the crack in the shoe plates on the pier mentioned by Ouimet and other witnesses at the coroner's inquest.

A Racial Fight on Ship

San Francisco, Sept. 19.—One hundred and fifty Japanese and Chinese cannery hands engaged in a desperate fight with knives, on the high seas during the voyage of the barque Electra, to this port, from Mushagak, Alaska, and the encounter terminated only after a dozen of the contestants had been wounded and as many more placed in irons in the vessel's hold.

Hardly had the vessel put out to sea from Mushagak before a fight occurred between three Japanese and a Chinaman in the barque's forecastle. This was only a forerunner to the real scrimmage, however, and later a struggle between the two races began in earnest. Assembled on the [illegible] outnumbered the Japanese, started the trouble over by [illegible] food. A desperate fight followed, resulted in a victory for the latter.

OVER ONE HUNDRED LIVES WERE LOST

A Big Japanese Steamer Was Burned Off Ching Kiang, Forty Miles From Nanking, and Scores of People are Missing

Shanghai, Sept. 18.—A Japanese steamer, said to be the Tatoo Maru, has been burned three miles off Ching Kiang, on the right bank of the Yangtse Kiang, forty-five miles from Nanking. It is reported that one hundred lives were lost.

The Tatoo Maru is still on fire as this despatch is forwarded and the loss of life or extent of the damage done have not been ascertained, but it is known that many of the passengers and crew are missing and it is estimated that one hundred persons lost their lives.

The Tatoo Maru, formerly the Tatsuta Maru, is of 1,456 tons register, was built in Japan, launched in 1900, and belongs to the Osaka Shosen Kaisha Kaisha Company of Osaka, Japan. She is 299 feet long, has 30 feet beam and draws 11.1-2 [illegible] of water.

Police Court

At yesterday's session of the police court Ira Baker and Thos. Thompson, the boys whom it is alleged entered Minocolo's fruit store, Hunter street, on Sunday night, and who took a small sum of money and some fruit, came before His Worship Magistrate Dumble, and were again remanded for one week, to the Children's Shelter.

The case of the Baker boy was investigated to some extent but, as the parents were not present, his worship enlarged the case.

A gentleman who resides near the Baker boy's home, stated that the lad's home was not at all suitable for his welfare. There were two children, the boy being ten and the little girl seven. The parents, he said are addicted to the use of liquor and the children's surroundings are not wholesome. The father seems attached to his children, but the mother is not that way inclined.

Mr. R. F. McWilliams appeared for the Thompson boy and noted that if his worship would discharge the boy his father would send him out of the city to his grandmother. The magistrate said that grandmothers were apt to spoil children. Thompson has been in police court several times and talking to him does not seem to do much good. He also was remanded for a week.

Magistrates Should Have More Power

Judging by the number of vicious boys, evidently beyond an assured weak-kneed parental control, who of late frequently appear before his worship at the police court, and who are generally convicted on every charge, it seems that the government unless wishing the rising generation to go to the bad, will have to promulgate legislation whereby magistrates will have the power to have such bad boys flogged. This "suspended sentence" farce has become a stench in the nostrils of those who have the interests of the community or the boys themselves at heart. Surely any government could trust such a man as D. W. Dumble to use his discretion, and this magistrate has openly expressed his opinion of the present inefficiency of Ontario magistrates to properly handle boy thieves and other juvenile law breakers.

Salvation Army will Bring Out 25,000 More Immigrants

Ottawa, Sept. 18.—Col. Lamb, of the Salvation Army, who has charge of transportation of the Army's immigrants to Canada, had an interview this morning with Hon. Frank Oliver. He says that ten steamers have already been engaged to send immigrants to Canada in the spring, and he expects that before the season is over fully twenty-five thousand will be sent. A large number will be carried right through to the Pacific coast, and will be fed on the trains on the way.

Miss Margaret Isbister Now Mrs. A. Pearson

Yesterday afternoon, 200 London street, was the scene of a most interesting and pretty ceremony, when Miss Margaret A. Isbister, third daughter of Mr. Jacob Isbister, became the bride of Mr. Andrew Pearson of this city, son of Mr. Richard Pearson of Barrie. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. J. Keith, pastor of Knox church in the drawing room. The bride who was given away by her father, was attired in cream colienne, and carried a bouquet of white astors. She was attended by her sister, Miss Nettie Isbister, who was gowned in white. The groom was supported by Mr. W. Leonard of Lakefield.

After the ceremony some thirty guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding repast. Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. Jas. and Mrs. John McDonald of Barrie; Miss La Shannon, of Tweed, and Mrs. S. Ridpath, Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Pearson left on the 4.48 train for Toronto, Barrie and points west, and on their return will reside on Chamberlain street.

An Enjoyable Time

The St. Luke's Brotherhood of St. Andrew yesterday noted that their little trip to the residence of Mr. Chas. Graystock in Otonabee, the preceding night, was most enjoyable. Their conveyance was kindly placed at the disposal of the members by Mr. Arthur McCollum, vice-president of the chapter. Rev. Mr. Langfeldt preached and the singing was hearty and much enjoyed.

An Indian With a Jag

Yesterday afternoon an Indian carrying four or five paddles under one arm, and a lot of packages on the other and an evident jag in his department of the interior was hurrying down George street in quest of a train or boat, probably the latter. At the corner of George and Charlotte streets a gust of wind blew his broad brimmed felt hat off. In trying to catch the hat, this scion of the former rulers of the country evidently forgot the paddles and packages, which, to the amusement of pedestrians at that point flew in all directions. He eventually gathered up his goods, including the hat and ran at the "double quick" for home.

Dad Taylor's Prize Well Merited

Yesterday afternoon a Times reporter, happening to see Mr. Wm. Taylor, better known to his friends as "Dad," at work in his little but well laid out and tilled plot of ground which won him a first prize in the recent awards made by representatives of the Peterborough Horticultural Society. Mr. Taylor's flower beds and vegetable garden in the Custom House grounds are laid out with great advantage both to the public, as an ever-resting spot of verdure and gay flowers amid the brick walls of our main thoroughfare and as a public source of vegetables for the venerable ex-railroad man and present caretaker of the government building here. Mr. Taylor, without infringing on the public right of way to the corning warehouse has every foot of ground taken up and planted with a flourishing crop of vegetables of every kind. The flower beds are bright with blossoms of every species of flower known to Canadian horticulturists.

Mrs. Arthur Haverstock Makes Public Statement

Tells of Her Belief in the Undying Merit of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Halifax, N.S., Sept 19.—When interviewed at her home at 194 Argyle street, Mrs. Haverstock was quite willing to talk of her peculiarly unfortunate case. "I was always blue and depressed, felt weak, languid and utterly unfit for any work. My stomach was so disordered that I had no appetite. What I did eat disagreed. I suffered greatly from dizziness and sick headache and feared a nervous breakdown. Upon my druggist's recommendation I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

"I felt better at once. Every day I improved. In six days I was a well woman, cured completely after different physicians had failed to help me. It is for this reason that I strongly urge sufferers with stomach or digestive troubles to use Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Dr Hamilton's Pills strengthen the stomach, improve digestion, strengthen the nerves and restore vitalized systems to health. By cleansing the blood of long-standing impurities, by bringing the system to a high point of vigor, they effectually chase away weariness, depression and disease. Good for young and old, for men, for women, for children. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

Appointed Judge of the Supreme Court

Mr. N. D. Beck, a Former Local Man in High Position

It will be of interest to the many friends of the late Rev. J. W. R. Beck and members of his family here to learn that Mr. N. D. Beck, a son of the late rector of St. John's church in this city has by a decree from Ottawa, been made a judge on the supreme court of Alberta.

Mr. Beck, apart from his many friends in this city and neighborhood is possibly best known as the secretary between the Government and Mgr. Sbarretti, when the Ecclesiastical school question, arising out of the North-West Autonomy bills, was under discussion, in 1905.

The Times offers its best and heartiest congratulations to Mr. Beck in this recent elevation to so honorable and honorible a position in the judiciary of Canada.

Judge Edmison's Decision To-day

Enquiries made by The Times yesterday of County Magistrate Edmonson regarding his reservation in giving judgment in the two liquor cases tried some days ago, one against Mr. Lawless formerly of the Lakeview House, Lakefield, for selling liquor during prohibited hours, and one against Mr. Darcy of the Burleigh Falls Hotel for selling liquor to an Indian, elicited the fact that he will give his decision today.

The Pappas Appeal

It is likely that the appeal made by Messrs O'Connell and Gordon for their client, Mr. M. Pappas, who was recently fined $25 and costs in the police court for an alleged selling of tobacco by one of the latter's employees to a minor, will be tried at the Division Court on October 25, be held in the coutenty's office shortly. A boy 17 years of age, who was arrested by the police and summoned for prox. It will be remembered that a theft, sworn to having tobacco from a clerk of Mr. Pappas and that when the latter's clerks were brought into court the prisoner could not identify any of them as the one who sold him the goods.

St John's No. 6 Chapter, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, held an open meeting in the school room at eight p.m. The director, Mr. R. J. Devey presided, supported by Rev. Canon Davidson, Mr. F. J. Linton, Mr. Poe, Mr. I. S. Bell, while a goodly number of men availed themselves of the opportunity to learn somewhat of this church society and its rules of prayer and service. Addresses from Rev. Canon Davidson, Mr. Jas. Mc Poe, Mr. I. S. Bell and Mr. [illegible] were given on the above and the rector specially urging churchmen to come forward and definitely take up the work lying right to hand. All present joined in the short service of prayer and sang heartily in the hymn, "Jesus Calls Us," and "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," a most helpful meeting concluding shortly after nine o'clock.

Back from Port Arthur

The Times was favored with a visit from our old friend Mr. J. J. Walsh, Port Arthur, formerly of Apsley. Mr. and Mrs. Walsh, accompanied by their two children have been visiting their old home for the past two weeks, where they were most royally welcomed by their many friends and acquaintances. Mr. Walsh removed to Port Arthur six years ago, where he has been engaged in conducting a very successful blacksmithing business. He returned to the west last night, going by way of Sarnia.

Mr. Simons Gets an Agency

Mr. Pete Simons yesterday received a full line of samples of cloths of all kinds from the Mode-Artire Limited of Montreal, and will henceforth act as their local agent in his recently opened tailoring and pressing premises, of the south-west corner of George and Hunter streets. Mr. Simons noted that he had already received a good amount of patronage and has secured the nucleus of what promises to be a rapidly growing business.

A Busy Season

Peterborough Light and Power Co. Lays Six Miles of Pipe

Much credit is due to Mr. J. H. Learmonth, the efficient managing director of the Peterborough Light and Power Co., for the strenuous work he has been and continually is occupied in doing. During the late summer this company has laid some 30,000 feet of gas mains, amounting altogether to nearly six miles of pipe.

The old 11-4 inch main on Simcoe street has been replaced with three inch. A new main was laid on Charlotte street about three-quarters of the way out, to the boundary, also on Boswell avenue, Pearl avenue, Division street, Dalhousie street and on Water street, from Smith to Dublin.

The company report a great increase in the number of gas consumers having sold no less than 250 stoves.

The company has a new heater for small offices which is meeting with a great demand.

The Steamship War

The new rates, which are classified as war rates will go into effect on November 1st.

New Husband

Quite an Improvement an Old One

"I have been compelled to stop drinking it," I said to a friend who asked me to accept a cup of her good coffee. "Well," she said, "that needn't bother you, for I have Postum Food Coffee here, which completely cured a friend of mine of sick headaches."

"I tried her coffee and it was very good, but when I tried to make it at home, I was disappointed. I soon found that I was not making it correctly, but by putting in two heaping teaspoonfuls of Postum for each person and letting it boil twenty minutes it was delicious.

"I had at that time been an invalid for several years, but did not know my trouble was caused by coffee drinking, of which I was very fond. I immediately began to get better after leaving off coffee and using Postum, and stuck to it.

"One day I met a lady who was troubled the same as I was, and whose appearance on the street really shocked me, for she was so emaciated. She exclaimed in surprise at my improved appearance, and I wanted to know what I had been doing. She asked me if I had a healer of any kind. I said, 'Yes, I have allowed Postum Food Coffee to work the direct complete miracle in curing me.'

"My husband has been absent from home for some time, and has been in wretched health, having been in the hospital twice for indigestion. I wrote him to stop using coffee and try Postum—told him also just how to make it. Yesterday I received a letter from him in which he says, 'I am feeling very much better, thanks to you and Postum. I sleep better, eat better, and in fact, my dear, am quite an improvement on the old husband.' "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

MOTHERS MUST HAVE ABUNDANT STRENGTH

No Mother Can Rear a Healthy Child Unless She is Strong Herself.

A woman's anxieties multiply tenfold about the time the new baby is expected.

If her strength is exhausted and her blood weak, it goes hard in the hour of trial.

Ferrozone should be used because it makes the blood nutritious and rich. By instilling new strength into every part of the body, it uplifts your spirits at once.

Childbirth is certainly made easier by Ferrozone. The following statement expresses the earnest gratitude of Mrs. M. E. Duckworth, of Durham. It is a woman's story—of her own case—told that other women may profit by her experience.

"Before baby was born I was in a weak, miserable, nervous state. I had no reserve strength. I tried to build up, but nothing helped me. I looked upon the coming day with dread, knowing I was unequal to the occasion.

"Ferrozone braced me up at once. It gave me strength and spirits, brought back my nerve and cheerfulness. From my experience with Ferrozone I recommend it to all expectant mothers."

There is more concentrated nourishment in Ferrozone than you can get from anything else. It supplies what weak systems need. Simply take one tablet at meals and you'll feel benefited in a thousand ways.

NO LONGER COLONIES

One of the results of the recent conference in London between the Imperial Government and the Premiers of the self-governing communities in the British Empire is an important reorganization of the Colonial Office Notwithstanding the apparent inability of Lord Elgin, the Secretary of State for the Colonies in the present administration, to perceive the radical difference exists between those self-governing territories beyond the seas and the Crown Colonies which are under the direct control and guidance of the Secretary for the Colonies, the fact of this difference is too apparent to be any longer ignored by statesmen who realise the changed conditions that the growth of these sturdy offshoots of the British people has brought about. Even in Downing street itself there is a glimmer of perception of this fact, and the great architectural changes now taking place in that famous street may be regarded as typical of the altered view which the officialdom of the great departments of State take of the relations that Canada, Australasia and South Africa now hold to the United Kingdom. Not alone "Colonials"—to use a term more in vogue in London than elsewhere—regret that in the conference which marked the transition in the status of the Colonies from a subordinate position to one of equality, the great statesman who had so much to do with the change was no able to take an official part. Fitly might Mr. Chamberlain have said that the end crowned the work to which he had given the best that position of equality at some of his best years and in which he had so happily and so prosperously raised the dignity of the Colonial portfolio while giving the self-governing dominions of the King beyond the council board of the Empire that their present position and their immense potentialities entitle them to have.

In the reorganization of the Colonial Office there will be hereafter—as we understand the brief dispatch that has been received on the subject—a distinct difference between the Department and the self-governing dominions and between the former and the Crown Colonies. For the future the terms "colonies" or "colonial" will be officially confined to the Crown Colonies. Communications between Canada or Australia and the Colonial Office will be carried on as they would be with a foreign state, and it will be as "the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia" that those territories will be known. It would be entirely wrong to regard this as merely a matter of form or official routine and as having no material effect or significance. On the contrary, the change is of great importance and is as full of meaning as was that in the middle of the last century which withdrew the administration of the Colonies from the War Office—what seems to us now a most incongruous association—and placed them under the charge of a department, especially created for that purpose. Now another change is found to be convenient, and, indeed, necessary, and there is to be a clear distinction between the two classes, under one or other of which all the overseas parts of the British Empire will be placed.

It would seem to be not unlikely that before long another step in the reorganization of the Colonial Office may be taken and a new department created to transact official business with the self-governing communities. Indeed, something of the kind seems to be inevitable now that the Imperial authorities have recognized the change in status which they have secured. Already an Intelligence Department has been established in the Colonial Office, the duty of which is to maintain direct communication between the different colonial governments and the Imperial authorities and to supply information on all matters likely to be of interest to the former. It is not impossible that this Intelligence Department may prove to be the nucleus of a new secretaryship or board, having a representative in the cabinet, and dealing with all the multifarious matters which arise between these distant possessions and the Central Government. Such business ranges over nearly every department of the Government, particularly the Admiralty and the Board of Trade, while not infrequently something arises between a colony and a foreign power, foreign shipping which has to be referred to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

MASTERED BY AN IDEA

A writer in Success discusses the chances of President Roosevelt being again nominated, and takes much the same position as that of the Colonist namely, that Mr. Roosevelt cannot refuse the unanimous nomination of a convention, notwithstanding his declaration that he would not again be a candidate, and that he is very likely to receive such a nomination. The writer in Success goes a step further and says that Mr. Roosevelt is possessed by an idea. He is careful to point out that he does not mean that the idea has Mr. Roosevelt, which is a very different proposition. It is not exactly clear what this idea is, but as a determination to check the rapacity of capital. Men who are possessed by an idea are sometimes dangerous, and Mr. Roosevelt seems to be a man of qualities which may prove difficul to control, when once an idea it may be understood in a general way has run away with him. He is terribly impatient of opposition, and claims to something like encyclopaedic wisdom. From the correct number of children for a married couple to have to the thoughts of wild beasts, Mr. Roosevelt knows things just a little better than anyone else. This assumption of omniscience is his weakness; it is the tendon of Achilles in his make-up. Otherwise he is a man of strength, courage and honesty, as fine a type of administrator as could well be desired. If the people insist that he shall succeed himself, he will probably conclude that there is no use in any further negotiations against tremaining in office, and it is not impossible that by 1912 the struggle between capital and the rest of the community may have reached such a stage that he may again be his own logical successor. It is surprising how very often men, who have not aimed at absolutism, have been compelled by irrespective circumstances to exercise it. Napoleon did not set out with the intention of becoming emperor. He became so because he was possessed by an idea, and the times were ripe for the idea to do what it chose with him. Theodore I. is not an impossibility.

Toronto's New Horticultural Building

At last the fruit, flowers and vegetables, which have always been shown in abundance and in superfine quality at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, are to have suitable housing. A handsome new structure has been erected on the commanding site of the old main building, 254 feet in length by 58 feet in width, with three wings 156 feet by 58 feet. The building will be surmounted by a majestic dome 65 feet in diameter and 70 feet in heighth. Steel, pressed brick and stone have alone been used in the building, which will consequently be entirely fireproof. Provision has been made for electrical lighting on a magnificent scale. In the basement ample temperature-regulated storage will be found for plants and shrubs. When the building is complete it will have cost nigh on to $100,000

Nickel Pennies For Canada.

Canada is to have a new nickel penny. It is probable that the coin will be introduced with the opening of the Canadian branch of the Royal Mint next December. The old copper pennies were discarded because they were cumbersome, but there is said to be a demand for the penny coin, and the suggestion is that a nickel two-cent piece would fill the bill. The plan would also mean something to the Canadian nickel industry. The new mint will employ 50 or 60 men. The British mint is turning out per year sixteen million Canadian coins. The new mint will turn out that many or more, up to twenty millions.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO

Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 28 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, ore cropping out on the surface for 2500 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 50 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. PAR VALUE $1

All proceeds will be used in making the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont., are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

I GIVE YOU $10 FOR $5

This is a Bona Fide Proposal..

See Me At Once, and You Will Admit It.

I can do it because I still have part of a block of stock allotted to me to sell at FIVE CENTS. It is in the and shares in this Company are selling everywhere else at TEN cents now.

The Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company owns property of the very greatest promise at Ely, Nevada, and at Greenwater, two of the most famous copper districts of the continent. You have heard of Willow Creek—It is attracting as great attention in the mining world today as did the original copper find at Greenwater. One of the mines owned by this Company is on Willow Creek.

Come in and see me at once about this proposition. I have reports, maps, photographs of the workings, etc. It's a chance for you.

ering glimpse of her through the lower branches of the maples, but he remembered. And again, as on that day, he heard a faraway, ineffable music, the elfland horns, sounding the mysterious reveille which had wakened his soul to her coming.

She came to the gate to meet him and gave him her hand in greeting without a word—or the need of one—from either. Then together they set forth over the sun flecked pavement, the maples swishing above them, heavier branches crooning in the strong breeze, under a sky like a Della Robbia background. And up against the glorious blue of it some laughing, invisible girl was blowing, adam roughed blooms of pure cotton, as children blow thistledown.

When he opened her parasol as they came out into the broad sunshine beyond upper Main street there was the faintest mingling of wild roses and cinnamon loosed on the air.

"Joe," she said, "I'm very happy!"

"That's right," he returned heartily. "I think you always will be."

"But, oh, I wish," she went on, "that Mr. Arp could have lived to see you come down the courthouse steps!"

"God bless him!" said Joe. "I can bear the 'argument.'"

"Those dear old men have been so loyal to you, Joe."

"No," he returned; "loyal to Eakew."

"To you both," she said. "I'm afraid the old circle is broken up. They haven't met on the National House corner since he died. The colonel told me he couldn't bear to go there again."

"I don't believe any of them ever will," he returned. "And yet I never pass the place that I don't see Eakew in his old chair. I went there last night to commune with him. I couldn't sleep, and I got up and went over there. They'd left the chairs out, the town was asleep, and it was beautiful moonlight"—

"To commune with him? What about?"

"You."

"Why?" she asked, plainly mystified.

"I stood in need of good counsel," he answered cheerfully, "or a friendly word, perhaps, and as I sat there after awhile it came."

"What was it?"

"To forget that I was sodden with selfishness, to pretend not to be as full of meanness as I really was. Doesn't that seem to be Eakew's own voice?"

"Weren't you happy last night, Joe?"

"Oh, it was all right," he said quickly. "Don't you worry."

And at this old speech of his she broke into a little laugh, of which he had no comprehension.

"Mamie came to see me early this morning," she said after they had walked on in silence for a time. "Everything is all right with her again—that is, I think it will be. Eugene is coming home. And," she added thoughtfully, "it will be best for him to have his old place on the Tocsin again. She showed me his letter, and I liked it. I think he's been through the fire"—

Joe's distorted smile appeared. "And has come out gold?" he asked.

"No," she laughed, "but nearer it. And I think he'll try to be more worth her caring for. She has always thought that his leaving the Tocsin in the way he did was heroic. That was her word for it. And it was the finest thing he ever did."

"I can't figure Eugene out." Joe shook his head. "There's something behind his going away that I don't understand." This was altogether the truth, nor was there ever to come a time when either he or Mamie would understand what things had determined the departure of Eugene Bantry, though Mamie never questioned, as Joe did, the reasons for it or doubted those Eugene had given her, which were the same he had given her father, for she was content with his return.

Again the bells across the square rang out their chime. The paths were decorously enlivened with family and neighborhood groups bound church ward, and the rumble of the organ, playing the people into their pews, shook on the air. And Joe knew that he must speak quickly if he was to say what he had planned to say before he and Ariel went into the church.

"Ariel!" He tried to control his voice to a casual cheerfulness, but it would do nothing for him except betray a desperate embarrassment.

She looked at him quickly and as quickly away. "Yes?"

"I wanted to say something to you, and I'd better do it now—I think—before I go to church for the first time in two years." He managed to laugh, though with some ruefulness, and continued stammeringly. "I want to tell you how much I like him—how much I admire him."

"Admire whom?" she asked, a little coldly, for she knew.

"Mr. Ladew."

"So do I," she answered, looking straight ahead. "That is one reason why I wanted you to come with me today."

"It isn't only that. I want to tell you to tell you"— He broke off for a second. "You remember that night in my office before Fear came in?"

"Yes, I remember."

"And that I—that something I said troubled you because it—it sounded as if I cared too much for you"—

"No, not too much." She still looked straight ahead. They were walking very slowly. "You didn't understand. You'd been in my mind, you see, all those years—so much more than I in yours. I hadn't forgotten you. But to you I was really a stranger"—

"No, no!" he cried.

"Ah, I've seen how much he cares for you!"

"Yes, I was," she said gently, but very quickly. "And I—I didn't want you to fall in love with me at first sight. And yet—perhaps I did! But I hadn't thought of things in that way. I had just the same feeling for you that I always had—always! I had never cared so much for any one else, and it seemed to me the most necessary thing in my life to come back to that old companionship. Don't you remember—it used to trouble you so when I would take your hand? I think I loved your being a little rough with me. And once when I saw how you had been hurt, that day you ran away"—

"Ariel!" he gasped helplessly.

"Have you forgotten?"

He gathered himself together with all his will. "I want to prove to you," he said resolutely, "that the dear kindness of you isn't thrown away on me. I want you to know what I began to say—that it's all right with me, and I think Ladew"— He stopped again. "Ah, I've seen how much he cares for you!"

"Have you?"

"Ariel," he said, "that isn't fair to me, if you trust me. You could not have helped seeing"—

"But I have not seen it," she interrupted, with great calmness. After having said this, she finished truthfully: "If he did, I would never let him tell me. I like him too much."

"You mean you're not going to"—

Suddenly she turned to him. "No!" she said, with a depth of anger he had not heard in her voice since that long ago winter day when she struck Eugene Bantry with her clinched fist. She swept over him a blinding look of reproach. "How could I?"

And there, upon the steps of the church, in the sudden, dazzling vision of her love, fell the burden of him who had made his sorrowful pilgrimage across Main street bridge that morning.

A Rebuff For Dr. Johnson.

Dr. Johnson called one morning on Benjamin West to converse with him on American affairs. After some time Mr. West said that he had a young American (Gilbert Stuart) living with him, from whom he might derive some information, and introduced Stuart. The conversation continued (Stuart being thus invited to take a part in it), when the doctor observed to Mr. West that the young man spoke very good English and, turning to Stuart, rudely asked him where he had learned it. Stuart very promptly replied: "Sir, I can better tell you where I did not learn it. It was not from your dictionary."

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden nay little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac or Heart Nerve—simply needs and must have more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strengthen these Nerves—re-establish them as needed, with

Bank of Goldfield, Nevada.

This company owns forty (40) acres of one of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 mine claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna), the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty mine claims, situated three and one-half miles south of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeus group in the Diamondfield section, second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made out in Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has now succeeded in securing the Sure Thing claim (20 acres) in the Capras district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and cut by several cross cuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located on the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and with like the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed per usual on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We'd therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. MAY FACE COAL FAMINE.

Car Shortage This Fall Will Lead to Grave Situation.

Western Canada is face to face with a serious fuel problem again, and another famine such as made the winter of 1907 famous is not beyond probability. The deep snow of the past winter greatly hampered work in the bush, and but comparatively little wood was cut. Consequently this great source of supply will be eliminated. Wood will be very scarce and very dear. The only hope of householders lies in the fact that the coal supply may be abundant. At present, according to an official statement, there are only 41,950 cords of wood in sight for Winnipeg's consumption. Even much of that amount may not come this way. Inasmuch as the city requires 1,000 cords per day during the winter season, or upwards of 300,000 per annum, the seriousness of the situation is manifest. The country dealers are making a grave mistake by failing to lay in supplies of coal, and pursuing the policy of previous years by drawing from headquarters according to the demands of the trade.

The Situation Outlined.

The coal supply question is not understood without investigation. It has some features that are not within the knowledge of everyone. Western Canada, although dotted with mines, is not yet self-sustaining in the matter of fuel. Pittsburg still holds sway in the eastern half of Manitoba, including, of course, Winnipeg. There is plenty of coal in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Crow's Nest Pass, but not all of it is storable. Bituminous, semi-bituminous and anthracite products in and about the foothills of the Rockies are, of course, capable of being put into stock for steam and domestic consumption when required; but the lignite coal of the plains, including the output of the Edmonton, Strathcona, Morinville, Medicine Hat and Roche mines, cannot be stored. Alberta and Saskatchewan, consequently, depend for their storable coal on the mines of the Crow's Nest Pass, Lethbridge, Bankhead and Taber. Lignite helps out the current supply as long as there is transportation, but when, as was the case last winter, there is transportation difficulty, it is not of much service except, perhaps, to local farmers who have it themselves.

The Present Output

The output of the Crow's Nest is not more than 8,000 tons per day; and most of it is used for making coke for smelters and for steaming, only a comparatively small proportion being available for domestic purposes. The Taber workings are shipping 250 tons a day, and most of this is for stocking purposes. At a pinch the Canada West Coal & Coke Co. and the lesser mines might put out from 750 to 1,000 tons a day. The Galt mines at Lethbridge are producing 700 tons a day. A lot of development work is being done, and before winter their capacity will be increased to over 1,000. The whole of the mines of the neighborhood will be in a position to yield 3,000 tons. Bankhead is putting out 500 tons, and its total capacity, including briquettes, is 1,000. The Souris-Lignite coal fields yield 400 to 500 tons. Morinville mines are said to be putting out more. It is estimated that there will be 100,000 tons of coal in store along the C.P.R. west of Winnipeg by the time winter sets in.

Canadian Northern Criticized.

Whether that is sufficient reserve is to be questioned. It is, however, better than last year. Parts which will be in worse situation are those along the Canadian Northern Railway, where practically none is being accumulated. The same railway is said to be hampering Winnipeg wood dealers. A report presented recently by the fuel inspector shows that almost every Winnipeg dealer has wood along the Canadian Northern lines, but is unable to get cars to bring it into the city. Fuel is high without the prices being unnecessarily enhanced by a paucity of supply, accentuated by the railway, in the best months of the year, not being able to transport it. What the condition of affairs will be when the wheat is moving and later, if severe weather interferes with the transit, can be conjectured.

Demoralizing the People.

What fills the political air of Canada now with "graft" and suspicions of "graft?" asked Prof. Goldwin Smith at the conclusions of an article in The Canadian Magazine, entitled "Party Government." What is impairing the integrity of judicial appointments and thus assailing the last stronghold of public right and purity of Government? What but the necessities of party, which compel it to pay its adherents? Our people are good, but corruption will gradually work downwards. It has its instruments in party organizations and conventions, which, though the people are not aware of it, practically take the elections out of their hands. Government thus becomes standing machinery for the demoralization of the people.

Protest Against Saloons.

Secretary Fredericks, of the Kokomo Steel and Iron Co., Indianapolis, in a recent protest against saloons in the immediate neighborhood of factories, states that the saloons near their plant cost the company $75,000 a year. "As representative of manufacturing interests everywhere damaged similarly," he says, "let us have a law prohibiting under the severest penalty, a single saloon in factory district. Kokomo has thirty saloons that pay about $7,500 into the city treasury annually. The manufacturing interests of Kokomo are damaged more than ten times that amount by the saloons."

Will Be Notable Gathering.

The Right Hon. Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, will open the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto on Tuesday, Aug. 27. He will probably be supported by a company of Imperial notable, including Lord Milner, formerly High Commissioner for South Africa; the Right Rev. Winnington-Ingram, Lord Bishop of London, and Sir Daniel Morris, Governor of Barbadoes.

Lights for Rugby Practice

A meeting of the Executive of the Rugby Club has been held, when there were present Messrs. Cameron, Clarke, Crowley, Cluff and McDonough. The main business transacted was in connection with the installation of electric lights for the purpose of enabling the team to practice in the evening. The lights will be installed in a short time by the Peterborough Light and Power Company.

What Do They Cure?

The above question is often asked concerning Dr. Pierce's two leading medicines, "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription."

The answer is that "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most potent alterative or blood-purifier, and tonic or invigorator and acts especially favorably in a curative way upon all the mucous lining surfaces, as of the nasal passages, throat, bronchial tubes, stomach, bowels and bladder, curing a large per cent. of catarrhal cases whether the disease affects the nasal passages, the throat, larynx, bronchia, stomach (as catarrhal dyspepsia), bowels, (as mucous diarrhea), bladder, uterus or other pelvic organs. Even in the chronic or ulcerative stages of these affections it is often successful in affecting cures.

The "Favorite Prescription" is advised for the cure of one class of diseases—those peculiar weaknesses, derangements and irregularities incident to women only. It is a powerful yet gently acting invigorating tonic and nervine. For weak worn-out, over-worked women—no matter what has caused the break-down, "Favorite Prescription" will be found most effective in building up the strength, regulating the womanly functions, subduing pain and bringing about a healthy, vigorous condition of the whole system.

A book of particulars wraps each bottle giving the formulae of both medicines and quoting what scores of eminent medical authors, whose works are consulted by physicians of all the schools of practice as guides in prescribing, say of each ingredient entering into these medicines.

The words of praise bestowed on the several ingredients entering into Doctor Pierce's medicines by such writers should have more weight than any amount of non-professional testimonials, because such men are writing for the guidance of their medical brethren and know whereof they speak.

Both medicines are non-alcoholic, non-secret, and contain no harmful habit-forming drugs, being composed of glyceric extracts of the roots of native, American medicinal forest plants. They are now sold by dealers in medicine, and can safely afford to accept as a substitute for one of these medicines of known composition, any secret nostrum.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

Boys Are Being Sought For

Truant Officer George Cochrane was out doing detective work yesterday, trying to locate two school boys, who left home Tuesday morning, and have not been seen since. It was thought they would return home at night, but they failed to do so, and were not seen yesterday. Their parents are in a state of uneasiness.

Tiral Catarrh treatments are being mailed out free, on request, by Dr. Shoop Racine, Wis. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this scientific prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy. Sold by all dealers.

BOTH LIQUOR CASES WERE DISMISSED

County Magistrate Edminson Yesterday Gave Decision That Jacobs, the Indian, was Not Proved to be an Indian and That Lawless was Not Proprietor of Lakeview House.

It will be remembered that some days ago County Magistrate Edmison had six cases of alleged infraction of law, five under the liquor law and one under the Indian Act, connected with the alleged selling of liquor illegally. These were three against Mr. Darcy of the Burleigh Falls Hotel and three against Mr. Lawless, formerly proprietor of a Lakefield Hotel.

The first of these cases tried was against Mr. Darcy for selling liquor during prohibited hours, which was decided against Mr. Darcy and in which he was fined $50 and costs. Another similar case against the same defendant was dropped by the prosecution to demonstrate that they did not want to persecute. The cases were practically managed by Mr. Williams, chief license inspector of the Ontario government. Mr. Moore acting for the prosecution. Mr. Haverson of Toronto, counsel for the Ontario Licensed Victuallers' Protective Association, assisted by Mr. Hatton, acted for the defendants.

The third case on the docket was one where Mr. Darcy was charged with having sold intoxicants to one John Jacobs an Indian. Our readers will remember that the result of this trial mainly depended upon that now growing class of litigation when it has to be proved that "An Indian is, or is not, an Indian."

In the case Williams vs. Darcy, said Magistrate Edmison, I find a glass of beer, an intoxicant was supplied to John Jacobs, over the hotel bar by a man there and also that Darcy is the occupant of the house. It does not matter whether the liquor was paid for or not under the Indian Act. If Jacobs is an Indian under the act there should be a conviction. If the evidence is not sufficient to show that Jacobs is an Indian there should be no conviction. An effort was made to show that Jacobs was a member of the Chemong Band of Indians. Several witnesses were called among them Mr. McFarlane, the Indian agent at Keene, who said Jacobs was not in charge of the band but a constable, but Jacobs was not on his (the agent's) books as a member of any band nor has he ever received any government money or annuity. Next Dan Whetung jr., stated that he himself was a member of the band and that he was secretary of the band for some years, and kept the names and said positively that Jacobs received no annuity as an Indian. Jacobs lived on the Reserve a part of his time and he had no legal rights then but simply was there on sufferance of the members of the band who could have him removed at any time. Taking the definition as given by the statute, it says that any person of Indian blood belonging to a band, although the act uses the words "reputed to belong, is an Indian under the act. The mere fact of a man having Indian blood in his veins does not make him an Indian under the act. On the evidence adduced, I feel it my duty to determine that Jacobs is not proven to be an Indian under the act so I must dismiss the information.

In the case of Stewart vs. Lawless, charged with selling without a license, [illegible] find that Lawless was proprietor of that hotel when the alleged selling took place. There is Lawless,' Mr. Hattons and Quinn's evidence to consider. There must be evidence beyond all contradictable chance that the accused be clearly shown to be the actual proprietor when the selling took place. Lawless had left the house altogether and had, at that time taken possession of a house in Bobcaygeon and took no money in after the 1st, so I have to dismiss the case.

Police Court

At yesterday's session of the police court, Edward Shields, who came in from Cavan and tasted the joys and subsequent woes of too prolonged dallying with city dissipations and absorbed an immoderate quantity of foolish water, was charged with having been drunk. Edward was allowed to go on his promising to make for Cavan with the least possible delay. He promised and started south.

Jas Berry, who was charged with stealing a watch and arrested Wednesday afternoon, elected to be tried by a jury of his peers and was remanded until next Wednesday for preliminary hearing.

W. Ferguson, who some days ago took an epileptic fit in the court room whilst on trial for stealing three auger bits from Chas. Nixon of the Southern Hotel, was up yesterday for trial. The chief witness for the prosecution was ill in bed so that the case was impossible to be proceeded with. The prisoner was remanded [illegible] week, but was allowed to go on the distinct understanding that he leave the city at once.

It seems that Chief Roazel had got a report from the chief at Port Hope, noting that Ferguson has a very bad record. He has served six months in Cobourg jail and is well acquainted with the interior and and keepers of similar other institutions. As it is, judging by his record altogether likely that Ferguson will soon be in the toils again, it is cheaper that some other town, where he comes from preferably, should have the expense of boarding him. He promised to "jump town" at once

Boy Shot Two Brothers Named Downing in Woodstock

Woodstock, N.B., Sept. 20. — A double murder, in which two boys were shot by a boy companion while hunting in the woods, took place on Tuesday afternoon, in the woods on the Maine border. The boys all lived in this vicinity, and are sons of respectable farmers.

Guy and Oscar Downing, brothers, were shot by Guy Tardis, who was with his cousin Fred Tardis. As near as can be learned the particulars are as follows;

The two parties met in the woods three or four times, and each time the quarrels between them grew worse. The dispute was as to the right of [illegible] party to hunt in the woods near each other's houses. Finally, Guy Downing stood his rifle against the fence and ordered Fred Tardis to do the same. The former then went up to the latter and seized him by the collar Oscar Downing started toward Guy Tardis, who fired his gun, the bullet piercing Downing's lung and coming out at the shoulder blade. He dropped dead instantly. Guy Downing then ran, when Guy Tardis fired at him, striking him on the top of the head, the bullet plowing its way through his brain and killing him instantly also.

The Tardis boys were arrested and will be arraigned before the magistrate here immediately.

The boys were all about 17 years old.

THE STREET MAIL DELIVERY ASSURED

The Carriers will Have to Pass Strict Examination and Receive Small Wages--Mr. Geo. Ross, General Superintendent of Post Offices, in the City

It now seems that the long looked for modern postal facilities, necessarily incumbent upon Peterborough's fast and rapidly increasing growth in population and consequent postal revenue and requirements, are about to be "come un fait accompli," as Mr. Geo. Ross, general superintendent of post offices for Canada, has paid the city a personal visit in connection with this extended branch of the local service.

Deputy Superintendent Durston is here, still attending to the technicalities in connection with the establishment of the system.

Mr. Durston intimates that the system will be in working order in about eight or ten days. Mr. Durston pointed out it would be necessary, if the people were to get the full benefit of the system, to have all their correspondence addressed to their street and residence, number.

The carriers themselves, as noted in a former issue of The Times, are selected with reference to certain standards of physical, moral, educational efficiency. The men must not be under thirty years of age, they must also be able to read and write, and are given elementary problems in arithmetic to solve. Each applicant has to correct in proper English a mutilated paragraph. He also has to be supplied with a testimonial from a prominent business man and clergy man as to his reliability, and has to take an oath of allegiance to the Crown.

There will be seven men on the staff of carriers, and two deliveries a day will be made, one beginning at 7.30 a.m. and the other at 1 p. m.

The uniforms will be neat, and very serviceable, and the men will be obliged to keep them in good condition.

The initial salaries the carriers will receive will be $400 per annum with an increase of $50 each year until the maximum salary of $720 per year, or $2.25 per day is reached. There is also a yearly bonus of $20 granted to the carriers for general efficiency.

The routes as mapped out are;

No. 1—George street to Water on the east commencing from Hunter and continuing to extreme southern limit.

No. 2—Hunter street and north, east city, in the forenoon and Hunter street and south, east city in the afternoon.

No 4—Murray, McDonnell, London, Dublin and all cross streets from Water to Monaghan road.

No. 5—From Water north from Dublin following Water to River road to city limits.

No. 7—Wolfe, Townsend, Rink, Perry, Lake, Romaine, Park and all intersecting streets.

Mr. Peter Shields Killed by a Mad Bull at Smith Falls.

Smith's Falls, Sept. 20. — Peter Shields, aged about sixty years a life-long resident of this district, was mangled and killed by a bull this morning on his farm, about four miles from Smith's Falls. Mr. Shields had sold the animal, and the purchaser had gone but a short time when the almost lifeless body was found by a neighbor who happened to be passing, terribly mangled by the ferocious brute's pawing.

Mr. Shields had recently sold his farm, and was preparing to move to Smith's Falls, to retire from the active labor of the farm. He leaves a widow, two sons, Dr. John, of Chesterville, and Robert, now in Western Canada, and two daughters, Mrs. W. J. Ross, of Toronto, and Mollie, at home. He was most highly respected, and his sudden and tragic death has been a shock to the community.

Pro. Hockey League

Guelph Mercury: The official announcement was made today that a professional hockey league would be organized shortly in readiness for the coming winter season. Guelph will be included on the circuit. The clubs in the league will be Toronto, Peterborough, Belleville, Guelph, Brantford, and Berlin—three from the east and three from the west. However, only one district will be formed.

The Guelph team, according to one of the local officers, will be much the same as last year. Joe Quillet, "Dodger" Deyman, and Mercer have all promised to come back and will figure on the team.

A meeting to be held in Toronto on the first Saturday in October when the new league will be organized and the schedule drawn up.

Glergy Will Form Union

Cleveland, Sept. 17.—Cleveland preachers have raised their voices for a raise in pay, and one has gone so far as to suggest a union, by which to enforce a higher scale of remuneration. Increased cost of living is blamed and the charge is made that salaries have not advanced in ten years, while necessities of life cost so much preachers must squeeze each penny.

"The average pastor's work is sadly hampered by the meagreness of his salary," said Dr. F. D. Bagby, of the Franklin Avenue Church of Christ, today. "He has to plan and skimp and figure every penny to make both ends meet."

"Why not a union? The carpenters have one; why not a union of the disciples of the Carpenter's Son?" asked another pastor.

Reported Japan Will not Agree to Any Limitations

Tokio, Sept. 20.—Ottawa reports of the efforts of the Canadian authorities to induce Japan to enter a formal agreement placing a fixed yearly limit upon a number of Japanese immigrants have aroused great popular interest here. Any such negotiations are doomed to the same failure that has marked American efforts in the same direction, as the Japanese hold that such an agreement or treaty would be tantamount to an abrogation of their rights, guaranteed by the existing treaties.

In an official statement of its position the foreign office says that under the treaty no limitation can be placed upon Japanese subjects to live in British possessions. To consent to a limitation would mean to limit Japanese status as a world power, to which she would never consent. This sentiment is generally endorsed by the press, though the more conservative papers manifest a growing disposition to recognize that the low character of many of the Japanese in Canada and America is a contributing influence to the fomenting of trouble.

The Asahi remarks that the necessity deportation of Chinese coolies who had been brought in by the contractors to work on government railroads weakens Japan's case against Canada.

The French Expect Rebellious Tribesmen to Submit.

Casablanca, Sept. 19.—A party of 17 Moors today fired upon a scouting detachment of French irregular Algerican cavalry, who killed fourteen of the enemy and burned their bodies.

The kaids of the Zenara and Saidia tribes are expected to make their submission tonight.

Paris, Sept. 20.—The French government is greatly encouraged by the improvement in the Moroccan situation and strong hope is entertained that the rebellious tribesmen, with whom the delegates who conferred with General Drude on Sunday are now consulting, will agree to the peace terms which include;

First—The punishment of the authors of the Casablanca massacres and the ring leaders of the movement.

Second—An agreement that no tribesmen shall enter with arms within a radius of twelve kilometers of the city.

Third—The acceptance in principle of the payment of a war contribution, the amount of which will be fixed hereafter by negotiations between the Moroccan government and France and Spain.

Fourth—The surrender of hostages to insure the fulfillment of these conditions.

It is pointed out that the war contribution has no relation to the indemnities to be exacted from the Moors for the loss of life and property, which will be a matter for future adjustment.

If peace is arranged on the above terms no further landings of troops will be made, and, pending the result of the negotiations, the orders for the embarkments and forwarding of reenforcements have been rescinded.

Another good feature of the situation is a definite agreement with Mohammed el Cabbas, the Moroccan war minister, for the immediate installation of police at Tangier in accordance with the terms of the Algericas convention; namely, native police under Franco-Spanish instructors.

The ultimate outcome of the struggle between the rival sultans of Morocco is a matter with which the French government is not concerned, the mandates of France and Spain being limited to the restoration of order and security at the Moroccan ports.

Mr. Emmerson is Satisfied

St. John, N.B., Sept. 20.—Hon. H. R. Emmerson, in giving contradiction to the report that he intended to retire from public life, said he could not imagine what had given rise to such a report. "The people of Westmoreland," he said, "have elected me as their representative, and have expressed satisfaction with the way I have served, and I know of no reason why I should retire. As a matter of fact, I intend to be in my seat in the House of Commons during the coming session to take part in the work of that body, as I can, in the interests of my constituency and the country at large.

"If anybody is worrying over the fact that I will attend this year as a private member, while last year I was a Cabinet minister he may rest assured that none of the worry is on my side. I left the Cabinet voluntarily under conditions which I have fully explained. My constituents express their hearty approval of my action, and have since given me many indications of the continuance of their support. Since the last session closed I have been very busy with my personal affairs which, I may add, I find much more profitable than public service.

Mr. Emmerson is at present in Dorchester, having recently returned from the Southern States, where he is interested in large coal and oil properties, which it is understood turned out to be an excellent investment.

City Officials in Convention

A conference was held yesterday afternoon between Mayor McWilliams and Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Board of Works, and the Peterborough Water Commissioners. The mayor and Ald. Duncan were appointed a committee at a recent meeting of the Board of Works to interview the water commissioners with a view of securing an extension of the time in which water can be secured for street watering. A conference was arranged for this afternoon and it is likely that some arrangement will be reached whereby the sprinkling of the streets may be kept up later in the fall than in past years.

Oriental Invasion in Plain Figures

During Last Thirteen Months Nearly 10,000 Asiatics Arrived in Canada

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—The returns of Oriental immigration to Canada for the past seven years, as reported to the immigration department, show that since 1901, Chinese immigrants have totalled 641; Japanese, 8,682; and Hindus, 2,906; a total Oriental immigration of 12,229. The figures include those who have arrived up to the end of July last. The census of 1901 showed the number of Chinese in Canada to be 16,375, and Japanese 3,612. There were but a score or so of Hindus. The total Oriental population of Canada at present is, therefore, approximately 30,000.

For the four years preceding 1905, there was practically no Oriental immigration and the influx of which British Columbia complains has taken place almost wholly within the last thirteen months. During that period arrivals have been as follows; Chinese, 614; Japanese, 6,405; Hindus, 2,474; a total of 9,494. The total number of Japanese now in the country is about ten thousand.

Charlie Johnston to Meet Carl Martyr, the Australian Runner

Mr Charles Johnston, brother of the stalwart manager of the Peterborough B.B.C., leaves this morning on the eight o'clock train for Toronto, in company with Harry Burridge and Corney Burns, who have been looking after the speedy five-mile runner. Johnston will meet the well known Carl Martyr, the great Australian runner, at the Toronto Exhibition grounds this afternoon for a $100 side bet. Martyr has been showing great form recently but will have to move faster to take the long green from the Johnston backers. Johnston finished his training on Wednesday.

Will Try to Dodge Fine

Chicago, Sept. 19.—The $29,240,000 fine imposed on the Standard Oil company by Federal Judge Landis recently, will be wiped out of existence on a technicality if the scheme of the Standard Oil Company lawyers which became known yesterday are carried to fruition.

The line of action revolves around the decision of Judge Landis in the Alton immunity case, which is set for hearing on September 24th. In the event that the Alton is granted the immunity, which is promised to the railroad through agreement with former Attorney-General Moody, the Standard Oil attorneys will demand that Judge Landis' fine be set aside on the ground that the Standard Oil lawyers should have been apprized of this immunity agreement in order that they might question the Alton railroad witnesses properly.

A DISCOVERY OF GREAT VALUE

Because a Cure Was Found for Inflammatory Rheumatism

There are many types of rheumatism, but none worse than inflammatory.

It was this kind that almost killed Mrs. Edw. Warman, of Kent Jct., N. B.

Every known remedy she tried, different doctors gave their advice, but the disease increased.

Weak and despairing, she was at her wits' end when the remarkable cure of Thos. Cullen was published. This gentleman was cured of rheumatism by "Ferrozone." Consequently Mrs. Warman used the same remedy. Here is her statement;

"For years I have been rheumatic. I tried various forms of relief without success. The disease increased, settled in my joints and muscles; these swelled, caused excruciating pain and kept me from sleeping. My limbs and arms stiffened, my shoulders were lame and prevented me from working. Week by week I was losing strength and despaired of finding a cure. It was a happy day I heard of Ferrozone. Every day I took Ferrozone I felt better, it eased the painful joints, gave rest so that not an ache has returned. New energy and a feeling of new life. Ferrozone cured my rheumatism, surely. Even damp weather no longer affects me."

Ferrozone has power to destroy Uric acid, neutralize and enrich the blood, and therefore does cure the worst cases. Mrs. Warman's statement proves this.

By removing the cause of the disease and building up a reserve of energy Ferrozone is certain to cure. Sufferer, isn't it about time to stop experimenting? Ferrozone is a cure. We guarantee this. Sold by all dealers, 50c per box or six boxes for $2.50. Re-

PHYSICAL DEFECTS OF SCHOOL CHILDREN

A committee of prominent educators in New York city, has been inquiring into the physical condition of school children, and at the reopening of the public schools in that city for the fall term presented a report on the result of their investigation procured in Boston, Chicago and other large centres, as well as in New York. The report discloses a most alarming condition, showing, as it does, that the progress of about one-third of all the school children in the United States is retarded by physical defects that might easily be remedied by proper care.

A synopsis of the report says in part;

"Based on the physical defects and home conditions of 1000 school children of New York city, it is estimated that 12,000,000 of the children of the United States have physical defects more or less, which should receive attention from parents and physicians. If the percentages recorded by the Board of Health should be maintained throughout the country (and it seems likely they would be as adenoids and impaired vision, mal-nutrition and defective breathing are found in rural as well as urban schools), there must be 1,440,000 ill nourished children, 5,815,000 with defective breathing in the United States. The large percentage of the defects indicated are easily remedied and may be prevented by proper care, though except in the case of defective vision, the causes are not easily determined."

The report contains the outline of a comprehensive plan for dealing with the physical defects of school children. The plan includes a thorough examination of all children, notification of parents, the enforcement of existing laws and securing proper authority where this is now lacking, to compel parents, who refuse to take the necessary steps; enforcement of health, tenement house and child labor laws; the establishment, in connection with the boards of education of school hygienes whose duty it shall be to see that school buildings are so constructed and so conducted that they cannot themselves produce or aggregate physical defects, and that the school curriculum should be so devised and executed as neither to produce nor aggregate them; to study the effect of school environment, curriculum building, home study physical training, upon the child, and to teach hygiene, so that the children themselves will cultivate habits of health and vitality to present happiness and future efficiency.

The matters that are dealt with in this report are worthy of the closest attention of all interested in the education of the young here and elsewhere. In the interests of the future citizenship of our country it would be well for those who are entrusted with the supervision and management of our educational affairs to investigate the physical conditions of our school population that the educational progress of none of our boys and girls may be retarded in the least by any physical defect that can easily be remedied.

COST OF WAR

It is estimated that a great European war would cost at least $700,000,000 a day. In view of this one can hardly see why a Peace Conference ought to be necessary, for one would suppose that the governments and peoples would see the folly of submitting disputes to the arbitration of the cannon instead of this the leading nations have chosen increasing their military and naval outlay on an unprecedented scale. The following table in round numbers shows the increase in the expenditures for these purposes in 1907 over 1897 in eight nations;

Great Britain	$116,000,000
United States	124,000,000
Germany	79,000,000
France	26,000,000
Russia	74,000,000
Italy	17,000,000
Austria	25,000,000
Japan	33,000,000

These figures are very instructive, and perhaps what will impress most people is that the United States heads the list in amount. That country is spending $76,000,000 more on its navy than it did ten years ago, and the increased expenditure on its army is an astonishing figure for a country situated as it is. Let us now examine the gross military and naval expenditure of these powers during the present year, again giving round numbers only;

Great Britain	$316,000,000
United States	198,000,000
Germany	281,000,000
France	205,000,000
Russia	210,000,000
Italy	85,000,000
Austria	114,000,000
Japan	101,000,000

These sums are taken from diagrams which were prepared by Mr. James for Mr. Stead's Hague Conference publications. They show that these eight nations alone are compelled by their policy to collect nearly $5,000,000 daily in taxation for the purpose of keeping themselves ready to destroy each other in case of emergency. If the less important nations were taken into account this daily levy would be very considerably increased. It is not extravagant to say that the cost of sustaining the armies and navies of the world is as great as the daily earnings of nearly 10,000,000 men at the average wage paid throughout the civilized world. This is the consummation to which our boasted civilization and refinement has attained.

MUSICAL SOUNDS.

Thinking Them as One Does Letters and Words Is Not Difficult.

To acquire the habit of thinking musical sounds, as one does letters and words, is not a difficult task. In fact, to one who undertakes it seriously there is no difficulty greater than that of learning to read literature. The usual method of tuition, which teaches the pupil to regard this, that or the other note as identical with certain positions on his instrument, is not one best calculated to make him an efficient and intelligent reader. He never attains to independence in musical thought, but must ever refer to his instrument before he can form a fairly accurate conception of the musical story that lies silent on the page before him.

As a child may learn to read the alphabet, to form letters into words and thence into sentences and so on, just so may the music student learn to combine and use the notes before him.

Strange as it may appear, the study of reading music may be carried on mentally. For instance, while I think of a melody my mind traces its flow and all the paraphernalia of the staff and notation appear as the melody passes away into time. I realise the clef, time, and key signatures, bar lines, rhythmic divisions, and in a moment I transfer the thought to paper. People in general are accustomed to the transference of their ordinary thoughts to papers and by constant practice the labor of transmittal from brain to paper is minimized so greatly as to appear almost automatic in performance. Whatever of laborious effort appear in the process of writing music is the result of want of practice and not that this form of writing is really or intrinsically more difficult than writing in words, or demands any greater mental or manual effort. The mind is here master and directs the operations of the hand; and both gain facility from the practice which comes of thinking music.—Musician.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 60 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont.,
are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell it 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by, see me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

After the Storm.

By... LULU JOHNSON.

Copyrighted, 1907, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

Brooks raised the shade and looked out, saying things softly to himself. A sodden landscape merged into leaden skies, and a fine, driving rain veiled but slightly the misery of the scene.

Across the road a score of ducks waddled contentedly through the muddy field to a puddle that had formed in a corner of the lot, but half a dozen bedraggled hens squawked dolefully as they picked up the angle-worms driven to the surface by the continued rain and rushed back to shelter. The cows in the side pasture huddled under the dripping trees, and the dog trotted across the road with his tail dragging almost in the mud as he made for the protection of the barn after being driven from the inviting kitchen door.

Brooks had come to Centerville for a purpose—a purpose that was not best served by confinement in a country boarding house for seven days and nights. Once or twice there had come a break in the steady rain, but in an hour or so it only came down the harder, as though to make up for the time it had lost.

He had wanted to take Bess over to the Big rock, where they had first met the summer before, and there make the avowal of love that had hung trembling upon his lips ever since. He had been able to take a whole month the year before—four golden weeks filled with sunshine and love.

Then Bess had gone to Europe as companion to a rich relative, and just as she returned Curtis Brooks had been called to South America on a matter of great importance. They had corresponded with such regularity as their uncertainty of movement permitted, but there had been no opportunity for a proposal, and now their waking time was divided between the parlor and the dining room of the old farmhouse.

Seven days of rain had got on Brooks' nerves. With his whole energy bent upon taking back to town Bess' promise, the dreary round of parlor life irritated him.

IN A MOMENT HE WAS ON HIS KNEES BESIDE HER.

Dickie Langdon, who had been the life of the stormbound party, had re-christened Willow farm the Ark, with an allusion to the animals that went two by two. The landlord was Noah, the colored servants Ham and his wife, and, with a sudden switch to "Pinafore," Langdon has insisted that Brooks was Dick Deadeye because of his disposition, and Brooks had not belied his nickname. It was not easy even for a patient man to sit quietly and see the hoped for opportunity pass, and Curtis Brooks was not a patient man.

All through those last weeks in Columbia he could shut his eyes and see the Big rock with Bess and himself standing beside it just as they had done the summer before. Now that he was here he could not even see it from the windows because of the curtain of mist and rain. Tomorrow he would have to return to town, and then there was another long trip to Canegena.

The frown was still on Brooks' face when he went down to breakfast. Langdon's jollity irritated him, and when they went back to the parlor after the meal he was gloomy and dispirited. Even Bess could not win him out of himself, and finally he went to his room to write some letters, he announced.

Writing consisted in sitting before a table with pen and ink and paper near at hand and staring at the drenched landscape before him. Even the ducks had sought cover, for now the rain was coming down in sheets. He could scarcely see across the yard, and, with a groan at the lost vacation, he let his head sink forward upon his arm.

A light knock at the door had to be twice repeated before he heard it. Bess stood in the hall, smiling as though there was no such thing as rain.

"Don't you want to go up and have a look at the Big rock this afternoon?" she asked. "I think it's going to stop raining at last. Anyway, I can wrap up well. It would be a shame not to see the old place before you go back."

"Bess, you're an angel," was all he could say. She laughed at the remark.

"It would be more reasonable to call me a duck," she reminded. "I'll be ready at 4 o'clock."

She darted away, and Brooks, with a new hope in his heart, caught up a pen and wrote the letters that he had been trying to compose all the week.

Bess was prompt, and at 4 o'clock they met on the piazza. The rain had gone back to a light drizzle, but Langdon affected to take a last farewell of them and promised to try and recover their bodies after the flood.

Bess gave him a saucy reply, and they started down the road. It was a hard climb up the steep side of the mountain at the foot of which Centerville nestled, but after the stuffy atmosphere of the house the wet earth filled the clean air with a fragrance peculiarly its own.

Bess drank deep drafts down into her lungs. "I'm glad that we came," she declared. "It isn't so very wet, and I did want to have you see Big rock again."

"I was afraid that it would be washed away before we could get up here," he said, with a smile. "This has been a nightmare week, Bess. What can you think of the way I've been acting?"

"I don't blame you," she said softly. "It must be horrid to have your only week spoiled. But there is Big rock," she added as they came in view of a huge bowlder, relic of some glacial period.

In clear weather they could see far down the valley from the ledge on which the rock stood. Even now they were given a glimpse of green fields and the darker tint of the wooded sections, though the silver thread of the river had become a leaden reflection of the cloudy skies.

Brooks leaned against the rock, while Bess seated herself upon a smaller stone. For a moment neither spoke; then Brooks turned to her.

"Bess, will my case ever come up here," he said. "Do you remember last summer meeting me here?"

"As though it were yesterday," she answered. "I had been day dreaming in the shade of the rock, and you came crashing through the bushes. I was a little frightened, I remember."

"I wanted to come back here," he said reflectively. "I had a foolish notion that I should be more fortunate if I spoke in the shadow of the Big rock. I wanted to ask you to marry me, Bess, but I don't suppose you would dare marry a chap who had shown such a temper as I have in the past few days."

"Why don't you ask and find out?" she suggested demurely.

In a moment he was upon his knees beside her. He had given up all hope as the long wet days wore upon his patience. He had not supposed that she would trust her future to him. Now that she had spoken he poured out his love in a torrent of speech, oblivious to all else. For a quarter of an hour he gave heed to nothing save the sweet face before him, looked at nothing save the tender eyes, now so full of love. Then she gently disengaged herself and pointed across the valley.

Far in the west the sun was showing through a rift in the clouds, lighting with prismatic splendor the arch of a rainbow. "Life is like that, dear," she said gently. "There must be some stormy days that we may better appreciate the sun."

"And you are not afraid—even of my temper?"

"Of course not, you foolish boy."

"Bess," he said impetuously, "I'm going to try and have very few storms. I know how hideously unpleasant they are. All this week I've been growing more and more certain that you would never have me, and all the time you were looking for the rainbow."

"Love is the pot of gold that is buried at the foot of that sort of a rainbow," she said, with a smile.

"And, unlike the others, we have found the gold," he exulted.

The Land of Old Age.

"There is a certain exquisite flattery in our grandchildren's company. Betty loves everything I do. I seem to her witty, accomplished and gifted. More than this, she treats me as an equal," says "An Elderly Woman" in Harper's Bazar. "She is ignorant of draughts; she is not afraid all the time that I am going to tire myself out. In a word, she doesn't know that when she comes to see me she comes into the Land of Old Age. She doesn't know that it's because I am old that I have all the time there is, while her mother has to make time for her. For all Betty does for me I try to repay her by indulgences of all sorts sometimes by forbidden indulgences. For these I get mildly scolded, but I keep right on. I have yet to hear of a boy who grew up a bad man because of the little indulgences his grandfather showered on him, nor of one who grew up a dyspeptic because of the surreptitious cookies his grandmother gave him. I am sure I am no worse a woman because my grandmother begged me off from some well merited punishments. So I spoil my grandchildren as much as I can, which is as much as I am let."

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative (Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proven mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zion group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

A telegram was received yesterday by Mrs. Charles Curtis, Aylmer street, informing her that her daughter, Miss Mabel, who left a few weeks ago, for Bazleton, B.C., to take up missionary work, has safely arrived at her destination. Miss Curtis sailed on the steamer "Northwest," a few days before this same boat was wrecked, with loss of life, fortunately escaping the danger.

Good Work by New Caretaker

The new janitor at the city buildings has begun well. If he continues as energetic, signs will be necessary for old citizens to recognize the place. Why. He cleaned, actually cleaned clean the windows so that the glass shone and looked as though someone was occupying the place. Real rags, soap water, scrapers and sensible tools were employed to take off the accumulations of years of dust and dirt. Such civic servants are rarely met with and should be encouraged.

CIGARETTES STILL POPULAR.

Consumption Increased One-Third—The Demand for Liquors.

The number of cigarettes entered for consumption in the Government record to the 1st of July totaled, according to the estimates of the Inland Revenue Department, 331,972,537, which is almost a third more than the consumption of the preceding year.

The consumption of last year was 269,334,939, the consumption of 1904 was 250,860,387. Ten years ago it was 93,798,000, from which it can be seen at a glance what tremendous strides the cigarette habit has been making in Canada during recent years. The consumption of tobacco of all kinds last year was the largest on record, being estimated at 2.953 pounds per head of population. The consumption of cigars was 194,816,575, compared with 193,827,342 in the year 1905, and 137,276,105 in 1904.

The consumption of spirits last year is given at 947 gallons per head of the population, which was slightly higher than the return for 1905. The consumption of wines, amounting to .092 gallons per head, compared with .091 gallons in 1905, varies but very little from year to year.

The statement of the Department of Inland Revenue is based on the actual returns of the nine months' period to the end of March. The consumption of beer, amounting to 5,595 gallons per head, compared with 5,255 gallons in 1905, is the largest consumption in the history of the country, and goes to show an increased use of these beverages. The consumption of beer, however has been added to cover the period to the end of June, so as to permit of a comparison with the fiscal year of the Dominion in its old form.

FAMOUS DETECTIVE RETIRES.

Inspector Arrow Leaves London to Organize Spanish Police.

Chief Inspector Arrow, one of the cleverest detectives at New Scotland Yard, retired on a pension.

Twenty-six years' service in the detective force, and a career distinguished by a series of professional triumphs, is the record which he will take with him to Barcelona, where he has been engaged at a large salary to inaugurate and control a department fashioned on the same lines as that at Scotland Yard.

Mr. Arrow's long list of successes as a detective began in 1886 with the gigantic watch fraud in Geneva, and, as the result of his investigations, two notorious swindlers were arrested in Brussels. In 1904 the mysterious disappearance of the Nelson relics from Greenwich Cottage caused a sensation. Arrow was successful in recovering the whole of the property, besides arresting the thief.

Another case in the same year which required much hard work was the racing sweepstakes swindle, engineered from Middelburg, and the capture of the Mackenzie gang put an end to a fraud by which thousands of punters were robbed by means of placing winners of prominent races in coupon competitions. Another successful coup was placed to his credit when he arrested Dr. Bridgewater and his confederates — a band of the cleverest criminals known in modern times—for wholesale cheque forgeries.

While in charge of the detective staff at Vine street Mr. Arrow's energies were directed to the suppression of gambling clubs in the West end, and it is due to him that these once thriving dens are now but rarely heard of. During his service in the Metropolitan force he received the personal thanks of the Queen for services rendered to Her Majesty.

Inspector Arrow's colleagues have presented him with a silver tea service as a souvenir of his popularity and of the esteem in which he is held.

DISMANTLED OFF CAPE HORN.

English Ship Finally Towed into Harbor After Stirring Voyage.

A thrilling account of the sufferings of the crew of the sailing ship Dynomene, which left the Tyne for San Francisco, has been received at South Shields by the parents of John Patterson, whose son was on board. When off Cape Horn the vessel encountered a terrific storm, the sea running mountains high. Every stitch of canvas was torn into ribbons, and all movable articles were swept off the decks. The huge iron jibboom was cut clean off by a big sea, whilst another wrecked the mast side, which weighed over a ton. Three of the seamen were terribly injured. Two managed to crawl under the forecastle head for shelter, but the third was washed about the deck, and finally got jammed between the foremast and the winch.

The master, second mate, and young Patterson crawled on their hands and knees and dragged the poor fellow by the legs into a place of safety. He was unconscious. When daylight came the vessel was almost a wreck. One of the yards had crashed through the deckhouse top, another had shattered the lifeboats, the tarpaulin was ripped off the hatches, and the decks were full of water fore and aft. A young sailor fell from the rigging into the tempestuous sea and was never seen again. The gale subsided slightly, and in trying to make Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, the ship Deacon came in sight, and the master offered to take off the crew, but this was refused. A squall then sprang up, and as the crippled vessel was being buffeted about it was sighted by a salvage steamer and taken into Montevideo, after having been 133 days out from the Tyne.

Sir Frederick's Prescription.

The King of England's famous surgeon, Sir Frederick Treves, has this to say to the rising generation. It comes from one who knows:

"Boys, don't bother about genius, and don't worry about being clever. Trust rather to hard work, perseverance and determination. The best motto for a long march is: 'Don't grumble. Plug on.' You hold your fortunes within you. Put your confidence in your own hands. Never waver in this belief. Don't swagger. The boy who swaggers likes the man who swaggers, has little else that he can do. He is a cheap-jack crying his own paltry wares. It is the empty tin that rattles most. Be honest, be loyal, be kind. Remember that the hardest thing to acquire in the frugality of being unselfish. As a quality it is one of the finest attributes of manliness. Love the sea, the ringing beach, and the open down. Keep clean body and mind."

Britishers Are Groaning.

That the British head is shrinking and the British muscles are degenerating, as recently charged by certain scientists, was refuted by evidence introduced at the meeting of the British Association of Leicester. Records for the last twenty years at Marlborough College show that the fourteen-year-old boys there average five pounds heavier and nearly an inch taller than those of 1885.

A hatter who furnishes hats for six schools, vouches that hats of 21 1-8 inches circumference formerly were rarely demanded, while now hats 23 1-8 inches in circumference are needed continuously.

Sir Victor Horsley proposed a motion at the meeting, urging the Government to institute in connection with the medical inspection of school children, a system of periodic measurements.

Shaving Statistics.

The statistician has been at it again. The average man, he has discovered, has twenty square inches of beard on his face. Ergo, the woman with twenty square inches of face shaves every morning he will, except over 7,300 square inches in a year. Accordingly if he shaves from the time he is twenty until he is seventy years old he will have shaved 365,000 square inches of beard.

Lawless Case May Be Appealed

It was rumored that an appeal will be made against the decision given by County Magistrate Edmison in the case of Stewart vs Lawless, in which the latter was discharged for an alleged selling of liquor in an unlicensed house. The appeal, if made will of course be mainly based upon the date of actual transfer of the Lakeview House by Lawless to Quinn. Quinn claims to have completed the contract prior to the date of the alleged sale and to have taken in the board money, etc., from occupants prior to the date of the case in question.

That our American forests abound in plants which possess the most valuable medicinal virtues is abundantly attested by scores of the most eminent medical writers and teachers. Even the untutored Indians had discovered the usefulness of many native plants before the advent of the white race. This information, imparted freely to the whites, led the latter to continue investigations until to-day we have a rich assortment of most valuable American medicinal roots.

Dr. Pierce believes that our American forests abound in most valuable medicinal roots for the cure of most obstinate and fatal diseases, if we would properly investigate them; and in confirmation of this conviction, he points with pride to the almost marvelous cures effected by his "Golden Medical Discovery," which has proven itself to be the most efficient stomach tonic liver invigorator, heart tonic and regulator and blood cleanser known to medical science. Dyspepsia, or indigestion, torpid liver, functional and even valvular and other affections of the heart yield to its curative action. The reason why it cures these and many other affections, is clearly shown in a little book of extracts from the standard medical works which is mailed free to any address by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., to all sending request for the same.

Not less marvelous, in the unparalleled cures it is constantly making of woman's many peculiar affections, weaknesses and distressing derangements, is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—as is amply attested by thousands of unsolicited testimonials contributed by grateful patients who have been cured by it of catarrhal pelvic drains, painful periods, irregularities, prolapsus and other displacements, caused by weakness, ulceration of uterus and kindred affections, often after many other advertised medicines, and physicians had failed.

Both the above mentioned medicines are wholly made up from the glyceric extracts of native, medicinal roots. The processes employed in their manufacture were original with Dr. Pierce, and they are carried on by skilled chemists and pharmacists with the aid of apparatus and appliances specially designed and built for this purpose. Both medicines are entirely free from alcohol and all other harmful, habit-forming drugs. A full list of their ingredients is printed on each bottle-wrapper.

GODERICH COUPLE KILLED ON HONEY-MOON BY TRAIN

Sad Ending to F.Reid and His Young Bride

Were Driving From Guelph to Galt--Were Unable to Hear the Train's Approach Owing to An Exceptionally High Wind--Die in Galt

Hespeler, Sept. 20.—This morning the 11 o'clock express train from Guelph struck a rig at Waterloo crossing, three miles east of Hespeler, badly injuring F. Reid and his bride, Miss McDowell, both of Goderich, who were on their honeymoon.

They were both taken to Galt Hospital, where they succumbed to their injuries.

Reid was aged 28, and his newly-wed wife aged 25. They were killed at the level crossing three miles north of Hespeler. They were driving from Guelph to Galt, and were unable to hear the train's approach owing to an exceptionally high wind. The buggy was smashed to pieces. The horse was killed, and both occupants of the buggy hurled to the ground with terrific force. There were no eye-witnesses to the accident, but the victims were found shortly after the train passed.

Mrs Reid died before reaching the hospital, and Reid only lived a few minutes longer. The parents of the young couple were notified by telegraph of the fatality.

WERE ON HONEYMOON.

Galt, Sept. 20.—It was a sad ending of the honeymoon trip of Mr. and Mrs. F. Reid of Goderich.

While driving to visit friends near Hespeler the buggy in which they were driving was struck by the 11.15 G.T.R. train.

Both occupants of the buggy were removed to the Galt Hospital, where they died within an hour.

An inquest will be held.

The Death Roll for Sept. Very Small

The first twelve days of September have been characterized by an almost total absence of deaths, so far as Peterborough is concerned. Not in a number of years has there been a September in which there have been so few deaths recorded, the majority of the deaths occurring during this month so far being confined to children.

The doctors and undertakers are being given a rest this month, and it is an encouraging sign that, with the autumn coming on, the health of the residents of Peterborough is generally so good.

To Organize Labor Party

Winnipeg, Sept. 20.—The refusal of Premier Laurier to answer the memorial of the labor congress on the question of having the Japanese treaty abrogated has stirred the labor delegates now assembled in Winnipeg.

While the convention understands this is a matter for imperial authority alone, they feel that the situation is so critical in the Canadian west that Sir Wilfrid could at least forecast "sympathetic" discussion. His silence has mystified the delegates and they are displaying their resentment by placing an order for tomorrow's executive session for the consideration of united political action by labor interests.

This means possibly the formation of a third party and is of special interest in view of the fact that a Dominion election is approaching.

IMPOSSIBLE.

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—"They cannot do it. That treaty was not to be abrogated for four years," emphatically said T. Nosse, the Japanese consul-general, today commenting on the trades congress requisition. The treaty was signed about a year ago and cannot become inoperative for three years. It would mean the reducing of Canada's trade with Japan.

Theatrical

The ruralite in a great city has furnished the funny page with most of its material for the past decade, and the bewhiskered charmer looking down cable slots and blowing out the gas, has become a familiar figure, but the author of "Sis in New York," has gotten out of the beaten path and instead of her dad floundering around the city streets we have the philosophic Hoosier miss on her first visit to the big city by the sea, and if we are to believe the advance notices and the critics along the line she is supplied with the best vehicle she has had to these many days. Suffice the same old bunch of rural favorites and fun-makers will accompany her when she comes to the Grand this afternoon and evening.

A Treat at the Grand Monday Night

Going up to the top of the list of great, big successes for the season, jolly Grace Cameron and her big musical company, in C. Herbert Kerr's latest success, "Little Dollie Dimples," with a cast of sixty people, carrying the entire production including electrical effects, etc., prettiest costumes seen in any production this season, and more snappy music heard than in any other production in the past three years. Miss Cameron will sing her famous song, "When Little Dollie Dimples Made a Hit,' as sung by her for three seasons at the New York Casino in "Piff Paff Pouff." The cast in support of Miss Cameron is one of the strongest seen in musical comedy for a long time, being such well known artists as Miss Daisy King, Miss Florence Langdon Tempest, Miss Phoebe Cardownie, Mr. Al. Lawrence, the mimic and man with a hundred faces; Mr. Lorenz Rivers, the famous tenor singer; the well known Elm City Quartette, and the greatest musical act in America, The Criterion Musical Four. During the performance Miss Cameron will also sing many of the latest songs by the author of this play, written especially for her, such as "Good Bye Dear Old Home," "I'm an Awful Bore," "I'm So Very Shy," and the duet, "In Days Gone By," assisted by Irving Newhoff, the tenor singer, and one of the biggest hits of the season.

BRITAIN IS ACTING FOR THE HINDOOS AT BELLINHAM

British Ambassador Seeks Compensation

Disorders at Bellingham, Which Resulted in the Intimidation of the Hindoos and Caused Their Departure Has Been Reported to Department at Washington.

Portland, Ore., Sept. 21.—A despatch from Olympia says:

The disorders in Bellingham several days ago, which resulted in the intimidation of the Hindoos and caused their departure from that city has been brought to the attention of the State Department at Washington through a note from the British Ambassador. The ambassador states that he has been informed that a majority of the Hindoos have left Bellingham for Canada in consequence of the trouble, and that those at Everett are in fear of an outbreak.

Acting Secretary of States Adee wired Governor Mead the substance of the ambassador's note, and asked that he be advised as to the situation. On receipt of this note the governor wired Mayor Black at Bellingham and Mayor Newton Jones at Everett to ascertain the conditions in those cities, and has received these replies, which were communicated to Washington.

"Bellingham—Hindoos have largely left here. There is no danger of trouble under present conditions. No force has ever been used. They were ordered out of town by a crowd of men and boys. I immediately swore in sufficient officers to protect them, and so mobbed the interpreter. I also caused the arrest and prosecution of the rioters. Press reports are greatly exaggerated. Hindoos are receiving, and will receive, full protection.

(Signed) "Alfred L. Black, mayor."

"Everett—Am in receipt of your telegram and as the mayor is out of town and cannot be located. I will state that there are no indications of any trouble. Have been instructed by the mayor in case of trouble to deputize every available man.

(Signed) "Scott Marshall,"

"Chief of Police."

Hyman May Never Return

Ottawa, Sept. 20.—Statements have reached Ottawa that Hon. Chas. Hyman's health is no better. He is suffering from the most severe nervous break-down. It is doubtful if he will ever return to London, or manage his business if he does.

Young Lady Lawyer Sworn in at Osgoode Hall Yesterday.

Toronto, Sept. 20. — The gloomy old corridors of Osgoode Hall were enlivened this morning by one of the rarest ceremonies ever seen in the temple of the goddess of justice—the swearing in of a girl student as a full-fledged barrister of his Majesty's high courts.

THIRD LADY LAWYER.

Miss Robinson is the third female lawyer in Ontario. The first was Clara Brett Martin, who was sworn in about ten years ago, and is now in Toronto, and the second was Miss E. M. Powley, of Port Arthur. She became a lawyer about five years ago.

The swearing in of Miss Robinson created a mild sensation in the Hall. She is a general favorite among the students, and during her course of five years has become popular among all her acquaintances.

Nevertheless the older heads among the lawyers stood in the corridors and stared as the pretty young lawyer, robed in black, and with a rosy flush on her cheeks, walked out of the court room and received the hearty congratulations of half a dozen enthusiastic female friends.

"See the bewitching vision," said one K.C. to his fellows.

"We'll soon be crowded out of the profession if this keeps on," remarked another legal light.

TO PRACTICE IN ST. THOMAS.

Miss Robinson told a press representative she would return to St. Thomas, and take up her legal duties at the office of her late father's firm. She does not intend to begin work in the courts as yet.

Seven young men were also sworn in as barristers. They are K. F. Mackenzie, C. C. Robinson, A. W. Fraser, H. W. Shapley, H. A. Chadwick, W. E. Lear, and A. T. Bowlby.

Judge Magee administered the oath of office, and impressed on the youthful legal luminaries the dignity and the honor of the profession.

Mr. G. H. Williamson Resigns as Secretary of Y.M.C.A.

Mr. George H. Williamson, for the past ten years secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, has resigned the position to become the first general secretary of the Association at Fort William. His resignation was accepted at a meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Board of Directors after due consideration. A resolution expressing confidence in Mr. Williamson and appreciation of his ten years' of service, was unanimously passed. Mr. Williamson has worked hard and has proved a most efficient secretary.

Mr. Williamson became secretary of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A. in May, 1897, and has given the Association ten years of faithful service. A committee, consisting of Messrs. Harding, Roger, Howden and Conmal was appointed to secure a successor for the position which Mr. Williamson is vacating.

Promoted to Colonel?

Lieut.-Col. Miller has been connected with the 57th Regiment for 43 years, and has made a most efficient and painstaking officer. He has risen to his present command by strenuous work, strict attention to regimental duties and marked ability. It is however anticipated that militia orders issued this week will place him on the retired list, and put Major Arthur Stevenson in command of the regiment.

The Wandering Boy is Found

We are pleased to note that the little boy, Peter O'Shea who, as noted in yesterday's Times wandered away from the House of Providence at noon on Thursday has been found. This little seven-year-old chap caused both the sisters at the House of Providence and the police considerable anxiety yesterday, and the preceding afternoon. He was yesterday afternoon however located at a farm house some distance from town.

A Good Start is Half the Race

The best start towards a successful day is a dish of delicious, wholesome Grape-Nuts food and cream for breakfast.

The crisp, firm, "nutty" granules indicate firm flesh and crackling good humor. Its food value lies in the stored-up energy and tissue-repairing material in whole wheat and barley, so prepared by slow heat and moisture and subsequent thorough baking, that "all there is" in these cereals is retained and made perfectly digestible.

Let the meat go for breakfast and supper, take on Grape-Nuts in its place, and

Police Court

On Thursday night a two-seated democrat containing P. C. McDonald, Messrs. I. Eastwood and H. Snowden, returned to the city after a fruitless drive to Dummer where they went, armed with a warrant to arrest Malcolm Muir for stealing a horse and buggy, belonging to Mr. Eastwood. When they arrived at their destination, their man had left Dummer.

It appears that a week ago last Tuesday evening, he called at the livery on Simcoe street and hired a horse and buggy. For three days nothing was seen of either Muir or the outfit, and it was thought that he had left the city. On Friday last Mr. Eastwood happened to be at the Albion Hotel and saw his horse and buggy standing in the yard. It had been there three days. Muir having got drunk and neglected to return the outfit.

It might be mentioned that a Times representative saw the outfit start out on their search, but by request of Chief Roszel and, in the interests of justice, The Times said nothing about this matter in yesterday's issue. There is however reason to believe that the police have got a clue as to Muir's present location, and that an arrest will be heard of in the near future.

Only one case was tried at yesterday's session of the police court, namely that of Hugh Gibbs, who was accused of having, on Tuesday night, created a disturbance at the corner of George and Sherbrooke streets. Gibbs was fined $2 with $4.15 costs and was given ten days to raise the simoleons. In default of payment the alternative will be ten days' sojourn in the proximity of Victoria Park.

Received First Prize

Some of our readers may remember that when Mr. Wm. James last year was engaged to take charge of the extensive lawns and gardens on the beautiful grounds belonging to Senator Geo. A. Cox, The Times prophesized that good work would result. Our prophecy has been verified as not only has year did the lawn and garden referred to take a prize granted by the Peterborough Horticultural Society, but this year, the society awarded first prize to those gardens, owing to the splendid work done by Mr. James. This was in the class for garden or lawn worked by hired labor only. Mr. James is evidently an expert in the line of gardening and attending to lawns, etc.

Jas. Schrum, of Dartmouth, Makes Valuable Discovery

Dartmouth, N.S., Sept. 21.—There is a strong moral in the statement of James Schrum, of Pleasant street. Like thousands of people, he was failing in health because his stomach and digestive organs were out of repair. His vitality was slipping away, he was losing ground every day.

"I could not have held on much longer. I was wasting away simply because no remedy I used gave the tone and strength to my stomach that it craved for. The vital forces of my system seemed dead. I was advised to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills. What hidden weakness they searched out I don't know, but in a miraculous way they have made a new man of me. My stomach troubles are cured, rich blood now runs through my veins—clear skin and unmistakable evidences of health and vigor I feel every day. Dr. Hamilton's Pills have certainly mastered the secret of curing the sickly enervated man and I strongly urge everyone in failing or lost health to use this grand remedy."

Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut are purely vegetable—all the ingredients coming from that great store house of Nature, they can't help but Heal, Strengthen, Cure.

The Largest Lunge on Record

Yesterday a fine box of game arrived at the Queen's Hotel, from Sturgeon Point, consigned to Mr. Tooley by Mr. Chas. Dusty, who is on the staff of this hotel, but now away on his holidays on Sturgeon, Pigeon, and other lakes. The box contained twenty five fine wild duck, black and others and teal. These were shot by Mr. Dusty and his son-in-law, Mr. Hammond, manager of the Lindsay water works. Their outing was notable by the capture of the largest lunge on record in those waters. These two, whilst out trolling a few days ago felt a tug on the line that absolutely checked the progress of the boat and even started it on a rear-ward trip. They had to get to shore, near Sturgeon Point, as quickly as oars and muscles would permit against the efforts of the fish. After great manoeuvering they succeeded in landing their fish which proved to be a lunge that turned the scales at 52 pounds.

Ghas. Burton was Committed on Charge of Stealing Money

Mr. McWilliams made a strong plea for his client charged with having robbed Rich. A. Payne, North Monaghan, a former employer — Burton was committed for trial by County Magistrate Edmison.

Yesterday afternoon County Magistrate Edmison held court in the county council chamber, when Chas. A. Burton, who was arrested by High County Constable Cochrane, or rather brought to him here from Chemong a few days ago, was charged with stealing $30 from Richard A. Payne, of North Monaghan.

Mr. McWilliams appeared for the prisoner and County Crown Attorney Wood for the prosecution.

The first witness called was Payne, who said he is a farmer of North Monaghan. He recognized the prisoner, Burton, who worked for him in the early part of the summer, from May 15th to June 10th. He paid prisoner $20 altogether. He again met Burton on Tuesday, Sept. 10th, while in the city, going to the post office. Burton said he had been sick and was doing nothing. He told Burton he was alone and asked him to come out to the farm. They were to meet later on at Cavanagh's hotel, but Burton did not show up. Witness met him later on, on Stewart street, and took him to the farm. That afternoon witness got a letter out of the post office containing $40, composed of one $20, one $10 and two $5 bills. When he got in his trousers pocket. He went to Grafton's store and made sundry purchases paying therefor with a $5 bill. He got in change a $2 bill and some silver. The $2 bill he placed in his pocketbook apart from the balance of the money. Burton, without giving any preliminary notice of such act, left for town on Thursday morning. Burton did not tell him how he, Burton was off financially. Burton told him he had to undergo an operation and would go to Toronto to a hospital. When witness got home on Tuesday night, he left the money in his trousers pockets, the garment being left hanging on a nail in his bedroom. He went on to explain that there are two doors to his bedroom, one leading to a hallway of which the prisoner's bedroom opened. After Burton had left, witness took out his pocketbook and found a $2 and a $5 bill folded together, and this was all that was left of his trousers pocket. This was on Saturday evening. There had been also a $20 and a $10 bill. He had not looked in his pocketbook between finding the loss and the day he was in Grafton's. No members of his family went to the trousers pockets in this meantime. No one except members of his family were upstairs. The hired boy never went upstairs.

To Mr. McWilliams, witness said he only had a little silver in his pocket when he went to town that day. He then reiterated his former story about the $40 and his purchase in Grafton's store. There had been no trouble between him and Burton. He would have kept Burton on had he wanted to stay. The money found when he discovered his loss was in the same pair of trousers he had worn into town.

Here Mr. Wood produced a letter written by the prisoner to Mrs. Payne, after the date of the alleged theft, in which he made no mention about the money but that he was going to hospital, and if they did not meet again here, they would in eternity.

Mrs. Payne, wife of the former witness gave evidence, which as far as practicable and applicable to the case, was practically a corroboration of her husband's evidence.

After hearing further evidence the magistrate committed the prisoner for trial before Judge Wisbert. He will probably be tried on Monday.

A Bold Step.

To overcome the well-grounded and reasonable objections of the more intelligent to the use of secret, medicinal compounds, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., some time ago, decided to make a bold departure from the usual course pursued by the makers of put-up medicines for domestic use, and so has published broadcast and openly to the whole world, a full and complete list of all the ingredients entering into the composition of his widely celebrated medicines. Thus he has taken his numerous patrons and patients into his full confidence. Thus too he has removed his medicines from among secret nostrums of doubtful merits, and made them Remedies of Known Composition.

By this bold step Dr. Pierce has shown that his remedies are of such excellence that he is not afraid to subject them to the fullest scrutiny.

Not only does the wrapper of every bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the famous medicine for weak stomach, torpid liver or biliousness and all catarrhal diseases wherever located, have printed upon it, in plain English, a full and complete list of all the ingredients composing it, but a small book has been compiled from numerous standard medical works of all the different schools of practice, containing very numerous extracts from the writings of leading practitioners of medicine, endorsing in the strongest possible terms, each and every ingredient contained in Dr. Pierce's medicines. One of these little books will be mailed free to any one sending address on postal card or by letter, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., and requesting the same. From this little book it will be learned that Dr. Pierce's medicines contain no alcohol, narcotics, mineral agents or other poisonous or injurious agents and that they are made from native, medicinal roots of great value, also that some of the most valuable ingredients contained in Dr. Pierce's favorite Prescription for weak nervous, over-worked, "run-down," nervous and debilitated women, were employed long years ago by the Indians for similar ailments affecting their squaws. In fact, one of the most valuable medicinal plants entering into the composition of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, was known to the Indians as "squaw-weed." Our knowledge of the uses of not a few of our most valuable native, medicinal plants was gained from the Indians.

As made up by improved and exact processes, the "Favorite Prescription" is a most efficient remedy for regulating all the womanly functions, correcting displacements, as prolapsus, anteversion and retroversion, overcoming painful periods, toning up the nerves and bringing about a perfect state of health. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

THE "YELLOW PERIL"

A considerable number of years ago Lord Wolseley startled the world by a prediction that the time was fast approaching when the white races of the earth would require to combine in a defensive movement against the aggression of the hordes of Asia; but while he was listened to with the attention, which is always manifested when a student of world problems cares to speak, no general alarm was created, the consensus of opinion being that the danger he pictured must be a very long way off. In our own British Columbia, where the waters which wash the shores extend unbroken to the coast of Asia, we are, owing to the rapid march of events, brought face to face with the problem which Wolseley foresaw the Occident would one day have to grapple with. No thoughtful person can approach this problem without being at once impressed by its serious nature and the difficulties which confront those who would essay a solution of it. There is no division of sentiment amongst the people of Canada in respect to the necessity of the gates being closed against the influx from the Orient. But there is an obstacle in the way of our freedom of action to take the necessary steps to carry out our wishes. That obstacle—which of course is an obvious one—may be described as being involved in the necessity of Great Britain, when it is deemed expedient, in the interests of the empire, forming an alliance with an Asiatic power. It may be stated thus; Will not the loyalty of Canadians by such an alliance be put to too severe a test, if we are asked to observe a treaty which implies the untrammelled entry of Asiatics to British soil? The situation is grave in the extreme. On the one hand we are confronted with the certainty that there is a disposition on the part of all Canadians neither by word or deed to imperil imperial interests; on the other hand, we have the equal certainty that a strict observance of the terms of the treaty will impose upon a loyal people conditions which they simply cannot bear. The Toronto News puts the case quite forcibly when, in the course of a lengthy editorial article, it says;

"It is difficult to view of the relations between Great Britain and Japan and the exigencies of imperial policy to see how Ottawa can allow provincial legislation against the Japanese to go into effect, but it is certain that persistence in the policy of disallowance will breed serious friction between the province and the central authority, and seriously affect the prospects of government candidates in the coast constituencies. The future relations of China and Japan with the United States and with Canada constitutes a problem of tremendous significance. The exclusion of the Japanese people may involve us in very serious consequences, and yet nothing is more certain than that a higher civilization cannot be maintained in presence of lower; and that the free admission of Asiatic people will submerge white labor wherever the two forces come into contact.

EDUCATION AND CRIME

LEARNING RESPONSIBLE FOR INGENUITY OF CRIMINALS.

Clever Thefts Which Baffle the Police—New Species of Swindler—Crimes Against Property Are Increasing—Well-Educated "Crooks" Get Busy—Violence Gives Way to Softer Methods—Many Jewel Robberies.

The series of extremely clever thefts which have recently baffled the English police and astounded the public by their brilliant audacity has drawn attention to an unpleasant feature in the crime of the country, the growth of offences against property, and of offences which have been committed by persons who do not belong to the hereditary criminal class.

That the more serious offences are increasing while petty crime is decreasing is well known to those familiar with our criminal courts. Take for instance, the latest figures relating to indictable offences. In the latest statistical year they had reached 61,463, as against 59,960 in the previous year, and the annual average of 58,478 during the five years next preceding. Similarly, while the annual average number of persons convicted of serious crime in the five preceding years amounted to 134,287, during this latest year the number reached the high total of 196,851.

The great mass of all crime is now directed against property. Indeed, nine-tenths of the crime of the country consists of offences against other people's property, and this proportion, high as it is, is steadily increasing, while crime against the person is rapidly diminishing. Violence, in fact, is giving place to cunning and educated effort, and striking evidence of this is shown in the fact that offences against property accompanied with violence are steadily decreasing. Out of a percentage of 179.06 offences against property per 100,000 of population, as many as 157.85 are now unaccompanied by violence.

Ingenuity, Not Violence.

Some of the chief police authorities attribute this diversion of the criminal habit to education. Education has converted the assaulting robber into an ingenious thief, and many ingenious thieves into highly fraudulent persons. The weapon of offence is becoming more often a cunning trick, a clever stratagem, a lying prospectus, fraudulent imitation, adulteration, and the like. To give but one instance of the latter, in one police district no lower than 47 per cent. of the trade samples taken for analysis were found to be adulterated. More serious crimes against property, however, are rampant; and in Liverpool alone, in the latest statistical year, there were 1,271.28 per 100,000 of population, as against 530.27 per 100,000 ten years ago. They have practically doubled in ten years.

Nor is this a mere sudden leap upward which may be followed immediately by a sudden decline. Here are the figures of the last four years of persons tried for offences against property without violence: 47,783, 49,094, 51,009, and 53,944. That reveals a steady crescendo in crime. So, too, with thefts which have been reported to the police. I take the period of the last six years, and I obtain 57,000, 58,000, 60,000, 62,000, 68,000, 70,000. These figures show a steady but terribly rapid advance in dishonesty and theft.

The New Educated Criminal.

An itching greed seems to lie at the bottom of these crimes, especially when one considers the great increase in cases of obtaining money by false pretences and in betting and gambling offences. A remarkable feature, too, of the burglaries and shop thefts is the large number of persons concerned in them who are not professional or habitual criminals. In Leeds alone there were in the last year no fewer than 354 persons concerned in breaking into houses and shops who belonged to the noncriminal class and had no conviction or charge of any kind against their names. In five years, such offences—so far, that is, as they have been tried at quarter sessions and assizes—have risen from 1,785 to 2,870.

It would be dangerous to attribute this growth of theft and larceny to one cause, but the head constable of Liverpool is undoubtedly on the right track when he ascribes a great deal of it to the spread of education. It is the widespread penetration of education which has sharpened the wits, enlarged the outlook, heightened the imagination, and fashioned the instrument with which ingenious and daring and wholesale theft may be carried on. It is safer and more profitable nowadays to eschew violence and to substitute "finished manners" in perpetrating crime.

And this is why so many jewel robberies are so cunningly planned and perfectly executed that their prevention seems impossible, and the discovery of the criminals concerned has become so difficult.

At any rate, this form of crime is now so prevalent and is increasing so rapidly that it calls for immediate inquiry, while it suggests painfully that this greedy rage for other people's goods may be a reflection of the "quick rich" impulse which is so characteristic of the present day.

King's Act of Politeness.

Anecdotes of King Edward's visit to Cardiff are beginning to come in.

When the royal procession was passing along the path leading to Caerphilly Castle, a little three-year-old boy, named Emrys Jenkins, was placed on the barrier alongside the path.

The excitement of the approach of Their Majesties caused the little lad to drop his handkerchief.

Without a moment's hesitation the King stooped and picked it up, and was about to restore it to another little boy, when the Queen with a smile pointed out the rightful owner.

But Not to the Husband.

Passenger—I am traveling on my face.

Conductor—Well, it is certainly a plain road.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2000 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 60 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont.,
are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

Duncan, P. C.

By EMILE GIRARD.

Copyrighted, 1907, by Homer Sprague.

Marion looked up hopefully as the card was brought her. Even the announcement of Duncan's name was comforting. But the little oblong of cardboard bore, in addition to the name, the initials P. C. Perhaps it meant "penitent culprit." Duncan was always doing odd things. The magic letters might be his expression of regret.

But when he came briskly into the room there was no penitential sorrow in his countenance—only the same merry twinkle of the eyes, the old lifting of the corners of the mouth.

"They tell me that Tad is no better," he said as he took Marion's hand. "As you will perceive from my card, I am a physician to children."

Marion's face darkened. This, then, was the meaning of the card. He was worried about her brother. For a moment she was minded to renew the old quarrel, but she needed help and sympathy, and so she laid her head on his shoulder and sobbed out her troubles.

Her father had been obliged to go to Europe on business and had taken his wife with him. Marion had been left in charge of her nine-year-old brother, and almost before the ship had passed Sandy Hook Tad had come down with typhoid.

His robust constitution had thrown off the disease, but the battle had left him weak and listless, and even the gray bearded physician was worried.

"There is no actual danger," he explained to Marion, "but he must be roused from this lethargy or he will go into a decline."

He had confided the same fear to Henry Duncan when he met the latter on the street and the younger man had asked after his little charm. Then, despite the misunderstanding between Marion and himself, he could hold out no longer, and his call was the result.

"If he should die before mother comes back, what should I do?" wailed Marion.

"Send a cable," advised Duncan promptly, "but there is not going to be any more worry now that the physician to children has stepped in. May I see my patient?"

Marion led him to the boy's room. Tad's face lighted as he saw Duncan, and his fingers twined confidingly about the man's firm hand. Duncan was shocked at the thinness of the fingers, but he gave no sign.

TAD HID THE BLEMISH.

"What's the matter, old chap?" he demanded, with a voice now wonderfully gentle. "They tell me you don't find the world any good any more."

"I'm tired," said Tad plaintively.

"I'll bet you'd not be too tired to go to a circus," said Duncan.

Tad shook his head.

"There ain't any," he said. "I was asking Dr. Stanton. He says it's too early for them."

"Circuses are no good if they are picked before they are ripe," admitted Henry, "but if you don't want too big a circus I think I can get one for you."

"I don't want a play circus," explained the boy. "I've got some play circuses. One's in a book, and the other's in the cupboard."

"We got him a toy circus and a circus book," whispered Marion. "He has somehow set his mind on a circus. It will be a long time before one comes."

"There are no more circuses," reiterated Tad sadly. "They've all gone away."

"Rats!" laughed Duncan. "That shows all you know about circuses. Will a little circus do—a real circus, only with one ring?"

"Real horses, real everything?" demanded the boy.

"Everything except the tent and the red lemonade. You see, in winter they keep circuses in houses, so the elephant won't get his ears frostbitten. I bet if you had ears as big as an elephant's you wouldn't like to get your ears frostbitten."

The boy laughed in delight at the fancy and beat the counterpane with his fragile hand.

"Then there's the giraffe," went on Duncan. "Why, when he starts to cough it's a full minute before it wriggles up his throat. So they keep circuses in bothouses, just like plants."

"And there really is circuses?"

"You get rested up and we're going to one tomorrow," assured Henry.

"Really and truly?"

"Man's word," declared Henry as he put out his hand. "Now, you get better quick, so Dr. Stanton won't say that you can't come. I'll be here at 11."

With a pat on the curly head, he rose and left the room. Marion followed him down the hall.

"He will be awfully disappointed tomorrow," she said doubtfully.

"Don't believe it," laughed Duncan. "You leave it to me, and that boy will be champion scrapper of the block in another month. I have Stanton's permission to assume the case. He admits his inability to meet the situation. My fee is very large, though," he warned. "It is nothing less than a wife by the name of Marion."

"I don't think you will be kept waiting for the fee," she replied, blushing. "I'm sorry I was so mean."

"So am I," he agreed sedately. "That is," quickly, "I mean I am sorry I was mean. I'll be around in the morning."

She watched him stride up the street with his springy step and turned back into the house greatly comforted. Somehow Henry Duncan always brought comfort where he came. She had been so foolish to allow a petty misunderstanding to come between them!

Tad was sitting up, ready dressed, when Henry drove up to the door the next morning. Already the queer medicine had commenced to act, for he was far more like his old self, and a slight flush of excitement tinged the cheek that had threatened to fade into the waxen pallor of death.

Duncan wrapped the boy up warmly, and, with a flourish of the whip, they were off—away out past the town they went into the country, not yet freed from the thraldom of Jack Frost, though there was a promise of spring in the soft air.

It was to a place very unlike a circus that Duncan drove, a collection of long, low barns and one large, square building, but when they entered the latter, behold, there was a real circus ring, with a band in one corner, laboriously going over unfamiliar music.

A stout man nodded to Henry and stooped to greet Tad.

"You're going to have a circus all to yourself," he promised. "Want to feed the elephant?"

"I haven't any peanuts." Tad's lip began to quiver, but Henry drew a bag from his pocket.

He led the way to one of the barns, where Tad fed the elephants and was permitted to go much closer to the lion's cage than he could at the big circus. A man standing by even plucked a hair from the lion's tail and presented it to Tad with due ceremony. Then they went back to the big building and sat through a long, delightful dress rehearsal of the Boston Brothers' Unparalleled Railroad Circus and Menagerie. He was even permitted to see the cars shining in their new paint and was permitted personally to talk with the clown while Duncan talked with Manager Boston of the chances of an early season in the south.

"Good luck to you," Henry said as they shook hands in parting. "You've saved one youngster's life, and the season is not yet open."

"He'll be a mascot," said Boston as he waved a farewell. "Glad you brought him out."

It was past supper time when Duncan turned a very sleepy little boy over to his sister. Tad looked up drowsily as Marion put him to bed.

"There is circuses," he announced, "really and truly ones like Henry said. And I got a lion's tail," he added as his sleep heavy eyelids closed.

Marion came into the parlor, where Duncan paced the floor.

"Are you a magician?" she asked smilingly. Duncan shook his head.

"I knew Boston was going to take his show south early this year and got permission to bring Tad to the dress rehearsal. Have I earned my fee?"

"How can you earn what was already yours?" demanded Marion as he drew her to him.

Lots of Gold In Yukon.

There is still a golden harvest to be gathered from the gravels of the Klondike hills and valleys. The Government has completed an examination and survey of the gold bearing gravels of both the high and low levels. It is estimated that in the neighborhood where gold is known to exist and from which gold to the value of $94,750,000 has been taken by crude placer methods, there remains $53,642,620, which may be recovered at a profit by hydraulic mining, dredging and other advanced methods of gold recovery.

The examination was made by R. G. McConnell, of the geological survey, assisted by Joseph Keeley, geologist, and F. H. McLaren and F. O'Farrell topographers.

The estimate does not cover the creeks on the Indian River slope which have produced gold to the value of $94,250,000, making the total output of the Yukon district $179,080,000 to date. It is estimated that there can be still recovered eight to ten millions of gold from these gravels, making the certain future output of gravel gold from the Yukon over $53,000,000.

Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys surely point to weak kidney Nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, find their weakness, not in the organs itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen them. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is futile. It is a waste of time, and of no avail.

If your back aches or is weak, if the urine scalds, or is dark and strong, if you have symptoms of Brights or other distressing or dangerous kidney disease, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative a month—Tablets or Liquid—and see what it can and will do for you. Druggist recommend and sell

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proven mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeus group in the Diamondfield section beyond only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprate district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross cuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Cartridge Exploded and Canoe Sank

A Lakefield despatch says: Mr. Sam Trude, son of Mr. W. F. Tride, met with a very unpleasant experience on Saturday last. Mr. Trude was on his way up the lake in a canoe and whilst entering the Narrows attempted to place a cartridge in his gun. In some way the cartridge exploded, tearing a hole a foot long in the canoe, which filled at once. Luckily Mr Trude saw some logs close at hand, and by clambering on to these he was enabled to reach the shore in safety.

BISHOPS CRITICIZED.

Charged With Being Out of Sympathy With the Life of the Age.

Preaching recently in support of the Bishop of St. Albans' appeal for funds for the establishment of a new diocese, comprising the County of Essex, the Rev. W. Manning, vicar of St. Andrew's, Leytonstone, and hon. secretary of the Churchmen's Union, passed some trenchant strictures upon the episcopacy. He said:

"In our age the bishops have fallen on evil days. Fawned upon by clergy who desire preferment, surrounded by ecclesiastics who are officials, adored by very churchy laymen and laywomen, they are out of favor with the mass of the people, and, though often respected and loved as men, they are not in favor as bishops. Their adherence to a quaint style of dress is of itself a ground for suspicion that they are out of sympathy with the life of the age.

"Their large incomes have been a not quite unjustifiable cause of dissatisfaction, and business men have doubted the statement that these large incomes are used for the administration rather than for the private purse of the bishop because no account has been published of the funds thus administered.

"The rough sense of justice of the English people is undoubtedly sound when it hears, not without indignation, of 1,139 livings with an average stipend of £87, and of bishops with stipends never lower than £3,000."

Speaking of the relationship between the clergy and their bishops Mr. Manning added that the help and inspiration of a great-hearted and wise-headed man, the sense of encouragement, and the effect of reproof from a Father in God, which some personal relationship between bishop and clergy would create, would do more to increase Church life and to invigorate Church work than all the garden-parties at country houses and meetings in duchesses' drawing-rooms and committees in London that were ever held.

SLAY BRITISH SOLDIERS.

Natives of New Hebrides Resist Advance of Punitive Party.

Much unrest prevails in portions of the New Hebrides, and news has recently been received at Sydney of an encounter between the natives and a punitive expedition landed by H. M. cruiser Cambria to avenge the murder of a European.

Some of the natives were in possession of rifles, and one bluejacket was killed and another wounded.

The New Hebrides is a group of islands in the western Pacific. The people, who are of Papuan descent, exhibit remarkable diversity of language, customs, and habits, and number from 75,000 to 80,000. Christianity is established in one of the islands, but most of the islanders are heathens, cannibals, and ancestor worshipers.

The New Hebrides convention, published a few months ago, practically establishes over the islands an Anglo-French condominium.

Each power is still said to retain jurisdiction over its own subjects. The islands, however, under the new convention are administered jointly by two high commissioners appointed by the two powers, who are authorized to issue regulations binding on all the inhabitants of the group, settlers or natives, and to control the police, harbors, public works, posts and telegraphs, and finance.

The signing of this convention created a strong feeling of dissatisfaction in Australia, the Australians regarding the New Hebrides as outlying parts of Australia which ought to be British.

Alien Stowaways.

The question whether, under the Aliens Act, a master is liable for having brought a stowaway alien to England came before Mr. Justice Bray recently.

A ship was on a voyage from New Zealand to Plymouth, and a stowaway got on board at Teneriffe. He was not discovered until the ship had been at sea for two days, and when the ship arrived in England the stowaway was prosecuted and convicted. The unpleasant result was, that in consequence of prosecuting the man, the shipowner was being compelled to pay the costs of sending him back to his own country, Germany, which was the very place he wanted to go to, and he had to be taken back there and fed on the way.

Sometimes as many as sixteen stowaways were found on a ship. If the contention of the crown were correct, nineteen other stowaways would have turned the ship into an emigrant ship. If the master were liable here the result would be that no master would prosecute a stowaway. The owner had tried to carry out the law of England, with the result that the Secretary of State wanted to fine him for doing so. If it had not been for the prosecution no expulsion order would have been made.

His lordship said it seemed to him that the policy of the act was that the ship should be made responsible if any undesirable alien came to this country.

Judgment was entered for the crown with costs.

England Short of Pennies.

Following the advent of the American penny-in-the-slot machines, the master of the royal mint is struggling with the problem of meeting the demand for copper coins, of which there is a serious shortage.

Investigation discloses that more than 60,000,000 pennies are withdrawn from circulation by being continuously locked up in machines used to supply gas, electricity, chocolate, matches, gum, etc.

The effect of this may be realized when it is remembered that this amount exceeds the total issue of penny during the years 1900, 1903 and 1905.

The mintage of gold in England has been far in excess of that of previous years, and this is taken as an indication that times are abnormally good. The mint bought over $60,500,000 worth of bar gold during the last fiscal year, and in addition took $13,500,000 in specie for coinage.

A Skunk for a Pet in Douro

A family living on the Douro road, near Auburn, have a unique specimen of a family pet. This is no more nor less than what the furriers would call it—a skunk, or "Alaska sable," or as the every day citizen who might have to bury his Sunday clothes did he meet it in close proximity, calls a skunk. This pet whilst certainly of beautiful exterior has a department of the interior that is capable of issueing arguments strong beyond dispute. There is no accounting for tastes but a chained up skunk must create strong feelings of affection or otherwise on the part of its owners.

A PELVIC DISEASE

Of Which Peruna Cured Me In a Very Short Time

WAS SAPPING MY LIFE.

MRS. SOPHIA CALDWELL

MRS. SOPHIA CALDWELL, 1122 McGavock St., Nashville, Tenn., writes:

"After doctoring for a year and finding no relief from leucorrhea resulting from prolapsus uteri, and which was sapping my life forces away, I finally tried Peruna, and when I found that it was helping me every day, it seemed almost too good to be true.

"But, it not only helped me, it cured me and in a very short time.

"I am now enjoying the best of health.

"I am strong and free from pain, and I certainly feel that all praise and honor are due to Peruna."

Thousands of women will read the testimonial of Mrs. Caldwell as above given.

Thousands of them will be induced to try the remedy that saved her.

Thousands of them will have the same experience she had.

Peruna is the remedy such women need. Peruna comes like a boon to suffering womankind.

Mrs. John Hopp, Webster Ave., Glendale, L. I., N. Y., has also been relieved of pelvic catarrh by Peruna.

Angry Miners in Atlin Drive Out Seventy-Five Japanese

Portland, Oregon, Sept. 22.—A despatch from Seattle says that 75 Japanese miners arriving at Atlin on Thursday night, to work in the mines were escorted to the river steamer Gleaner by three hundred whites yesterday morning, and started back toward Vancouver.

The white miners served notice upon the Japanese that if they did not stay away violence would be shown in protecting their dignities against Asiatic labor. The Japanese are almost destitute, and will be turned loose in Skaguay, Alaska.

Atlin is in northern British Columbia, on Atlin Lake, about 40 miles from the Alaskan border, and 60 miles from Skaguay. The despatch evidently means that, though the Japanese were started back from Vancouver, whence they came, they would become stranded on the way. Atlin has two banks, and a population of 500.

Ottawa, Sept. 23.—Consul-General Nosse has as yet no word of the reported anti-Japanese demonstration at Atlin.

Premier's Careful Reply to the Requests of Labor

Ottawa, Sept. 22.—In reply to the resolution of the Trades and Labor Congress sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the premier has sent the following reply;

"I have given due consideration to your request that immediate steps be taken to abrogate the treaty with Japan.

"I would observe that this treaty, when brought into existence some 15 years ago did not apply to Canada, and that some two years ago, in response to repeated expressions of public opinion and with the view of affording Canadian producers an opportunity of taking their share of the growing Japanese trade, the Canadian Government became a party to this treaty and that it was unanimously ratified by the Canadian Parliament.

"The treaty has proved of great advantage and our trade with it has considerably increased.

"You base your appeal for denunciation of the treaty on the allegation that a crisis has arisen in British Columbia by reason of the ungreeded influx of Japanese.

"Whilst it is true that most regrettable incidents have lately occurred in Vancouver, there seems reason to doubt that the case was the influx of Japanese, as I am in possession of a telegram from the mayor of Vancouver, which has been rendered public, which expressly avers that the disturbances were directed against Asiatics generally rather than against Japanese.

"Under such circumstances any precipitate action might be regrettable, and before committing themselves to such a course the government think that they should carefully enquire into the causes which, with in the recent past, have caused a greater influx to our shores than previously of oriental people."

Local Runners Success at Lindsay Saturday

Mr. Wm. John Bennett, one of the National Hotel staff, who competed in the five-mile road race at Lindsay Fair on Saturday afternoon, was successful in winning the race in the remarkable time of 33 minutes flat, defeating his nearest rival, Mr. Geo. Thornberry, an Indian, by about fifty yards thereby winning a beautiful gold watch Mr. Bennett says the roads were very bad.

Race Changes for the Exhibition

Following are the changes made in the exhibition horse race events, viz., the 2.50 class mentioned in the prize list will be changed to a 2.40 for half mile heats; the 2.24 will be 2.22 for mile heats; the 2.18 class will be mile heats and the 2.30 will be half mile heats.

Carl Martyr Defaults to Johnston

Mr. Fred Johnston, brother of Mr. Arthur J. Johnston, proprietor of the Windsor Hotel, who was to have raced with Mr. Carl Martyr, the champion runner of Australia, won the race by default Martyr refusing to run.

Road Race for Boys

The Peterborough Examiner has with great enterprise arranged for boys 17 years and under to be ran on Thanksgiving Day. The course will be from Nassau, at the same time the seniors start from Lakefield. Both races will, as the seniors' race of last year, finish in front of that office. The prizes will be three medals, one each of gold, silver and bronze. It is likely that the rising generation particularly those of it who have speedy, will take great interest in the event.

Cures all Lame Backs

Get from any prescription pharmacy the following;

Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime.

The above is considered by an eminent authority as the finest prescription ever written to relieve Backache, Kidney Trouble, Weak Bladder and all forms of Urinary difficulties. This mixture acts promptly on the internal organs in the Kidneys, and where did you come from, boy dear, helping them to filter and strain the uric acid and other waste matter from the blood which causes Rheumatism.

Some persons who suffer with the afflictions may not feel inclined to place much confidence in this simple mixture, yet, those who have tried it say the results are simply surprising, the relief being effected without the slightest injury to the stomach or other organs.

Mix some and give it a trial. It certainly comes highly recommended. It is the prescription of an eminent authority, whose entire reputation, it is said, was established by it.

Local Fall Fair, an Assured Success

It is now up to our citizens to prove whether Peterborough is to stand proportionately to population, on a par with either larger cities or small villages in the matter of maintaining and patronizing a fall exhibition of our own. There is no use trying to disguise the fact that this city, whilst energetic, patriotic and aggressive in all other matters that affect its welfare and good name, has been lax in its patronage of the annual fall fair. This is neither to the credit of our citizens nor fair to either the farming community who supply the great majority of the exhibits or to the directors who give their time and intelligence to making, as they have done our fall fair as interesting and instructive as that of any city twice our size.

This year the directors have gone to great lengths to have the Peterborough Exhibition a huge success. Exhibits are promised that will surpass all former records and amusements and varieties have been secured that will please the most exacting.

The races, whilst only one feature in the attractions will be of high class and well worth travelling miles to see. Many owners of crack steeds have signified their intention to enter and the "classes" to be run off are such as appeal to general interest. Whilst the people of Peterborough should turn out to show that Peterborough is able to run a good exhibition the fair of this year, will, on the merit of the many attractions offered be attended by bumper crowds each day the gates are open. The Street Railway Co. has arranged for a perfect system during the continuance of the fair so that that citizens will have prompt transit each way and no delay.

STEAMER "PICTON" SWEPT BY FLAMES--MAN AND WOMAN PERISH ON BOARD--LOSS $100,000

Members of Crew Make Heroic Rescue of the Passengers.

Toronto, Sept. 22.—Two lives were lost as the result of a fiercely rapid fire which destroyed the upper works of the Richelieu & Ontario steamer Picton at five p.m., Saturday. Heroism by Captain Charles Redfern and Purser Oswald saved at least three lives, while the night watchman, W. Taylor, who was sleeping when the fire broke out, had to jump into the bay.

The Picton arrived in the Scott street slip at 7 a.m. and was to have left for Hamilton at 6.30 p.m. At 5 o'clock, just after a big cargo had been taken on board, there came a sudden burst of flame from the engine room. Although the crew and longshoremen tried to get at the steamer's own fire appliances the smoke and heat drove them out. A still alarm was sent in by telephone to Bay and Lombard street stations, followed by an alarm from box 121 at the Toronto Electric Light Company's works, just across the slip.

The flames were in full possession of the eastern side of the vessel, when the firemen got to work, which they did in very quick time. The fireboat Nellie Bly, was also a prompt arrival from her berth at the foot of Church street, and threw two very effective streams from astern. In half an hour the flames were under control.

BODIES FOUND.

Although there had been some narrow escapes when the fire broke out, it was not until about three-quarters of an hour afterwards, when men of the crew began to find their way to their bunks to recover personal belongings, that it was found the flames had found a victim. George Linstead, in groping along the lower deck saw a body in the hold. It was that of Geo. Kleskie, a German, aged 40, who shipped at Montreal four months ago. He had died from suffocation, only his head and part of his face showing signs of burning.

It was then recalled by another man that Miss Winnie Hatch of Montreal had been in her cabin, which was on the east side, farther from the wharf. A first search of the charred and wrecked room did not reveal the body, but the firemen found it a few minutes later. It was fearfully burned and was carried to the electric light wharf.

Miss Hatch was engaged to be married to James McMillan, the cook of the steamer, and had been making the trip with him.

Forbids all Foreigners Whether Americans or Chinese from Working in Japan as Laborers

London, Sept. 22.—A despatch to the London Times from Pekin yesterday says that the labor troubles at Vancouver are being followed with much interest in the far east where an analogous problem has now arisen between China and Japan. Japanese imperial ordinance No. 352 of July 27, 1899, rigorously forbids all foreigners, whether European, American or Chinese, from working in Japan as laborers in agriculture, fishing, mining, manufacturing and other classes of industry outside the narrow residential settlements latined in former treaties, except by special permission of the local authorities.

The despatch adds; "Such permission, we are informed here, is never given. Article five of the ordinance provides that any Chinese working without the necessary permission are liable to explusion from Japan. Considerable numbers of Chinese laborers were recently introduced to work on the government railways of Japan, by certain Japanese contractors, who had not previously obtained this necessary permission.

Cartridges for the Moors Hidden on a British Ship

Dartmouth, Eng., Sept. 22.—A number of policemen and customs officers today boarded the British steamer Morocco, which arrived here today from London, bound for the Moroccan coast, and seized 217,000 percussion caps, evidently intended for the use of the Moors, who, as a rule, use old guns. German firemen and a Spanish coal trimmer were arrested.

MUST FIGHT.

Paris, Sept. 22.—It is officially announced this afternoon that the peace negotiations at Casablanca with the hostile Moors have failed, and that Gen. Drude will resume the offensive with the view of advancing the whole scheme and proposition as fast as that can possibly be done.

Power Project All Right

Toronto, Sept. 22.—In regard to the hydro-electric power commission, Hon. J. P. Whitney yesterday made the following brief statement upon that subject;

"I have nothing to say about it today nor will I have anything to say about it on Monday, but you can say this—that we are at present engaged in a general discussion of this business with the members of the hydro-electrical power commission, and with the companies concerned, and just as soon as we have anything of a definite nature to communicate to the public, we will be only too grand to make it.

"As far as the project itself is concerned, it is all right. Everything looks favorable and everything is perfectly satisfactory. But we have not as yet got things into such shape that we can make a public statement in the matter."

It is rumored that the C.P.R. intends owing to the recent great increase in passenger traffic between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, to place two extra trains on this route. The train running east would reach Peterborough about 3.30 or 4 o'clock p.m., and would reach Ottawa about nine o'clock the same evening. Running in the westerly direction, it is understood that the intention is to have the train leave Montreal about the same time that the one running east leaves Toronto, 1.30 or 2 o'clock, passing through Peterborough about eight o'clock.

Rudyard Kipling Coming to Canada

Noted Writer Has Sailed to Pay a Visit Here

London, Sept. 22.—Rudyard Kipling and his wife left on a visit to Canada. They sailed on the Empress of Ireland.

Dr. Morris, of Alien Immigration Board, who was recently reported as stating that trachoma cases are admitted into Canada, writes to the press contradicting the report.

The Canadian Northern Prairie Land has passed a dividend of 10 per cent. per annum.

Miss Letroy, of the British Woman's Emigration Association, does not encourage trained servants to go to Canada, but the girl of domestic tastes who has been in a shop or factory and finds it difficult to get into service in England, would become successful help there.

Wonderful Miracles Worked By Dr. Hamilton's Pills

Learned Physician Astounded by the Increasing Numbers of His Cures.

Halifax, N.S.S., Sept. 21.—That unusual knowledge is possessed by Dr. Hamilton is evidenced by the statement of Mrs. Macleod, of 344 Campbell Road, of this city. For years this lady suffered with torturing reeling headaches that could only be allayed by strong narcotics. "Different physicians," she states, "failed, so I decided to see what Dr. Hamilton could do. I purchased a few boxes of his Mandrake and Butternut Pills and their use immediately gave me most grateful relief. My dark, and his depressing influence left me. Spells of [illegible] sleeplessness, fear of nervous collapse, all these disappeared after treating with Dr Hamilton's Pills. My restoration to vigorous health is complete and no remedy could do more than Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut."

By searching out all weak spots, by enriching the blood, nourishing and fortifying the system, Dr. Hamilton's Pills work marvels for the sick and weak. 25 cents per box at all dealers.

Cressman's Grand Opening Was a Huge Success

Fully six thousand people attended the grand opening of A. W. Cressman's enlarged store on Friday evening, and still greater crowds were in attendance on Saturday afternoon and evening. To enable those present to better view the premises and goods, actual business was absolutely suspended on Friday evening, whilst a fine orchestra played all evening. In our former article we noted the great improvements and enlargements effected, which now gives Mr. Cressman a drygoods establishment equal to anything of its kind outside the largest cities. Owing to enlargement of the arches between the dividing walls of the upper floors, these flats are practically one large room, so that customers can see at a glance, as they step from the elevator the class of goods desired and thus save time and trouble.

The display windows are most beautifully and artistically dressed. Each department of the huge store having a window appropriately arranged to show the goods of such branches. The long succession of windows were displayed throughout with one scheme of decoration, namely with appropriate recognition of the season of the year. Tastefully arranged bunches of wheat on the stalk were shown in each, whilst fruit and other autumnal products appeared at places, combing to make a most artistic out ensemble. Mr. Cressman is fortunate in the possession of a window dresser who displays skilful taste and the happy knack of showing the most goods to the greatest advantage in the least space.

Every floor during the reception was a Mecca for ladies who delighted in seeing the latest styles on display. In the millinery department there were hundreds of the most gorgeous and elaborate copies of the New York and Paris styles. These were the creations of the greatest millinery fashion artists. Miss Smith and Miss McAllen, the milliners, spent two weeks in New York in the largest millinery concerns of that city and brought back the very latest ideas. The millinery parlors were beautifully decorated.

On the second floor a "rest room" has been added for customers which will be very popular. A new feature is the Dolly Varden shoe department, which has been fitted up in the most modern style. Here are sold the "Dolly Varden shoes for Dainty Women." The house furnishing department was a scene of beauty and utility. Piled upon piles of the most elaborate rugs from the best looms of the world. Here were specially noted handsome iron and brass beds, with a complete set of Belfast hand embroidered linen, and a complete set of lace spreads with shams to match, and costly silk quilts. The walls were decorated with fine carbon reproductions of some of the paintings of the most famous artists ready framed. The stock of carpets seems endless and comprises every line that the most exacting might require. This department covers the entire third floor of the three stores. The semi-ready wardrobe was displayed with all kinds of men's apparel of the latest styles, here as elsewhere the whole decoration scheme was carried out. In connection with this department has been added the "Foot-rite" branch where the Napoleonic shoes for men are handled. The word Napoleon is inseparably connected with, in fact, copyrighted for this make of shoe, and, in the window display of these shoes, was a statue of this great warrior.

Taking the whole display of Friday evening from every standpoint, it was a huge success, and reflected great credit upon Mr. Cressman for the grand display presented, and to the staff who assisted as well as the gentleman, to whose taste was due in large measure the beautiful decorative scheme.

Alarming Morality Among Irish People From White Plague

London, Sept. 22.—The most striking feature of the annual report of the registrar-general for Ireland, is the alarmingly high rate of mortality from tuberculosis.

Of the 74,427 deaths registered in Ireland last year, 11756, or 15.8 per cent., was due to tuberculosis, which far and away overtops all the other causes of mortality. The Irish registrar calls particular attention to this sacrifice of life "from a disease which is in a great degree preventible." He adds; "Although the members of the medical procession are strenuous in trying to awaken the public mind to a state of affairs that can only be considered as destructive to the community yet, comparatively speaking, our countrymen are not alive to the dangers which threaten them."

Next to tuberculosis, old age accounts for the largest number of death in Ireland, 8409 persons having died from this cause last year. As many as 606 deaths of persons aged 95 years and upwards were registered, and of these 133—57 males and 76 females—were returned as being 100 years of age or upwards. The registrar remarks that in recent years persons returned as centenarians in Ireland had so far as could be ascertained, their ages correctly stated.

BIRTHS AND MARRIAGES.

In 1906 the marriage rate in Ireland was 0.08 above the average of the previous ten years; the birth-rate was better by 0.4; and the death-rate was down by 0.9. The excess of births over deaths last year was 29,109, but as the emigrants numbered 35,344, the country lost 6,235 in population.

Of the children born in Ulster 3.5 per cent. were illegitimate; in Munster the percentage was 2.7; in Munster 2.2; and in Connaught 0.7.

Among the 22,662 marriages 15,816 were between Roman Catholics, 2603 were celebrated in the Church of Ireland, 2330 were Presbyterian, and 485 belonged to other religious denominations. Nine marriages were celebrated according to the usages of the Society of Friends, and 16 according to the Jewish rites.

Of widowers who were married was 8.5 and of widows 4.1. Bachelors who married widows numbered 2.5 per cent., while 1.6 per cent of the marriages were between widowers and widows.

As evidence of the advance of education it is mentioned that 9.14 per cent of the men and 93.8 per cent. of the women who were married last year signed the marriage register as compared with 61 per cent. of the men and 50 per cent. of the women in 1864.

THE WORLD'S BIGGEST CATASTROPHE

The great catastrophe the world has ever known is in progress at this moment, says Pearson's Weekly, and the world reeks little of nothing of it.

This is the plague epidemic in India, which has now been raging for more than eleven years, and which so far from showing any tendency to die out, keeps steadily increasing in intensity. Just, during the six weeks ending May 11 last, 481,892 persons perished from it, or at the rate of over 80,000 deaths a week.

Nothing approaching the appalling havoc represented by these figures has ever been recorded before. The nearest to it was in 1905, when, during the last week in March, the epidemic was responsible for 57,702 deaths.

No pestilence of ancient or modern times of which we have any knowledge has slain so many millions of people as has this one, and the end of which, mind, is not yet.

The "Great Plague of London" for example, about which everybody has heard, killed at the outside some 80,000 people in about months, or about as many as are dying weekly in India from a disease which is debilical with it in every respect.

The Black Death, it is said to have slain one-third of the then population of England—say 1,000,000 persons—but this is doubtful. Even admitting the correctness of the estimate, however, the mortality of the present epidemic in India has already more than doubled this huge total.

What will be the end no man can forsee or venture to forecast. It may be that all that has gone before and all that is happening now, inexpressibly awful though it is, is but the prelude or worse to follow.

The Question of Baldness

This is a vital question with hundreds of men who are bald or partially so. How to overcome the disfigurement lent by baldness is a simple matter when you consider the perfection of modern art in the making of Wigs and Toupees. The visit of Prof. Dorenwend, of Toronto, to Peterborough on September 27 and 28, when he will be at the Oriental Hotel, renders it possible for any who wish to consult him to do so at his private apartments retained in the Oriental Hotel for this purpose. Demonstration given to show the perfect naturalness of his Wigs and Toupees. Do not miss this opportunity. Remember the days and dates.

ENGLISH OF WILD WEST.

New and Picturesque Words — Old Time Buffalo Hunts.

In the West, which is the meeting place of many races, many new words have come into being, and not a few old ones have acquired a new sense by natural and half-natural processes, collectively defined as "evolution" by modern etymologists. Some of these Western colloquialisms which are as much used in Canada as in the United States are being gradually incorporated into the language for the cultured people. Among the words which have already "arrived," are coulee (a small valley), canon, or canyon, gulch, corrale an enclosure for cattle, shanty (French-Canadian chantier), tepee, lariat, etc.

Blood-Thirsty "Tepees."

The exact meaning of some of these words is unknown to an untraveled Englishman. For example, I remember the occasion of an English journalist visiting Western Canada for the first time, who mentioned in a descriptive letter the "blood-thirsty sleeds of the Tepees, a tribe of Indians who are met with everywhere in the Great Northwest." Then there are the Western words which are arriving—not all of which will "get there." The list of these might include quirt (the cowboy's whip), chapps (his leathern breeches), mavrick (a calf which, parted from its mother, cannot be assigned any particular brand-owner), and a variety of mining terms.

Money Is "Otter Skins."

Anything hidden is "cached"—the words recalls the time when all the rivers of the West were occupied by French-Canadian fur-traders and trappers—while money is known as "otter-skins" or "velvet" (both fur-trading terms) or "dust." The other day a journal in the Western States, referring to the political Dianas who are hunting Mr. Asquith, expressed the opinion that the Westminster debates were likely to remain "oratorical stag-dancers" for many years to come. A "stag-dance" was—and still is in the ultimate mining camps—a ball attended by gentlemen only, where, by the way, the "men" smoke their pipes and the "ladies" wear hats.

Here's a Hoi

The miner, anxious to "paint the town red," (a phase which is translated literally into the French of Quebec), asks his partner the mystic question, "Can you dig up?"

To "have a jag on" or to be "feeling lucky" are synonymous phrases. Perhaps the most interesting of all words and sayings entering into the ritual of "setting up drinks for the crowd" is the salutation used before emptying one's glass without taking breath, which is said to add to a man's carrying capacity. The Western old-timer always remarks "Waal here's a ho!" to which "Drink hearty!" is a favorite reply.

Buffalo Running Parties.

The reference is to the thunderous "Ho" given by the captain of the great prairie buffalo-running parties of the first half of the last century as a signal to begin firing. In the fifties these parties consisted of thousands of persons—men, women and children — and practically the whole population of Red River—the seed-pot of Manitoba—took part in them, the bag being used to make a year's supply of pemican for all the outposts of the Hudson Bay Co. throughout the vast domain of Rupert's Land. So this phrase is not a scrap of slang, but a key to the romantic history of the Inner West, "Canada."

LET BUFFALOES RANGE PLAINS.

Authorities Give Opinions as to Their Proper Location.

The Board of Trade, says The Calgary Albertan, has been getting opinions from different authorities about the proper location of the buffalo which are being brought into Alberta and others parts of Western Canada. Mr. Howell Harris, who has had much experience with the buffalo, rather discourages both the Sarcee and Stoney Indian reserves. In a letter to Mr. Richardson, secretary of the Board, he writes:

"In my opinion neither the Sarcee nor Stoney reserve is well suited for the buffalo in question. They are prairie, not mountain buffalo, and the buffalo of the prairie never flourished in the mountains. The Stoney reserve was, I think, the extreme limit of their range in the mountain direction. I would suggest that any of the prairie reserves such as the Blackfeet or Blood would be more suitable, for these are in the region which was their natural stamping ground.

"I deeply regretted to see the first part of this herd taken whose they were, as the buffalo never ranged in that locality. Swampy lands they always avoided, and I fear the experiment of placing them there will be a failure, as I do not believe it is a range at all suitable to the prairie buffalo."

Wheat to Pay Well.

According to present prospects western farmers will realize two dollars an acre more than last year on wheat is the opinion of C. C. Castle, chief warehouse commissioner of Canada.

He says that crop reports from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are very favorable; and it looks as if harvesting in all three will be general towards the end of the month if the weather continues favorable.

Manitoba wheat is expected to run from 14 to 16, or even 20 bushels per acre, with the crop still heavier in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Portions of the late sown wheat crop may be caught by early frosts, however.

This year's straw is lighter than last season's and the cost of handling the crop will, therefore, be less than it was last year.

New Buildings at Toronto Fair.

Upwards of $360,000 has been spent on new buildings and improvements at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, namely, Grand Stand, $212,000; Horticultural Building, $20,000; Railway Exhibits Building $40,000, making something like a million dollars spent upon new permanent buildings since the century opened.

Alcohol From Garbage.

That the method of garbage disposal is about to be revolutionized by the manufacture of denatured alcohol is the statement made to the common council of Milwaukee by Dr. W. A. Boyd of Rockford, Ill. Milwaukee now pays $1.89 a ton for burning its garbage at a municipal plant, and Dr. Boyd has offered to do the work at 70 cents a ton and at the end of ten years give the city his plant. Milwaukee gets no return in the way of by-products from burning its garbage. Dr. Boyd says he will get grease, fertilizer and alcohol from the waste. Alcohol would be the most important of the byproducts.

A Dickens Landmark.

The widening of Manchester streets has brought about the destruction of the old house in which lived the brothers Grant, the originals of the Brothers Cheeryble in "Nicholas Nickleby." With slight alteration, the house is said to stand today as it did when Dickens described it. One of its later occupants has said that lovers of Dickens' books came from all parts of the world to inspect the old place, especially Americans, and for relics of it, but that he had refused to part with them. One relic which many people would be glad to acquire is the fine old carved oak staircase.

The Hares of Maine.

The Kennebec Journal says that Game Warden George W. Ross in one month recently counted 300 barrels of dead hares going to Boston and New York markets over the Washington County railway. Furthermore, it is estimated by the game wardens that more than 1,000,000 hares are shipped from Maine every year and as many more used as food within the state. Notwithstanding this and the fact that thousands of hares are devoured every year by beasts and birds of prey these small animals continue to increase.

VANITY'S VISIONS.

Among the New Pocketbooks—Corset Sachet—Hat Trimmings.

Long, flat pocketbooks with a strap on the back are made of pigskin, morocco, alligator, pin seal and walrus leathers. Some have little watches set into the corner.

For the front of the corset a heart shaped sachet bag filled with cotton and my lady's favorite scent is covered with flowered silk. This little affair is attached to one side of the corset, and after it is closed it is secured by a tiny gold safety pin. There are also oblong sachet pads designed to fit the sides of the corsets under the arms when such filling is required.

The new effect in hat trimming is to have a shower of two or three long plumes, the longest reaching to the nape of the neck of its fair wearer.

Cape wraps lead all the rest, and the daintiest little confections of lace and silk, to say nothing of cloth, will adorn the shoulders of femininity this summer. These little wraps are in light colored silks and for a walking costume match the gown in color, but not always in material. There are any number of attractive designs, but the most practical has a bodice very much on the shirt waist order, with pleats from the shoulders, both back and front, and the neck cut in a V shape. The sleeves reach to the elbow and are of the kimono order. Bronze or black silk stockings are worn in the latest hosiery, clocked in groups between embroidered stripes.

The smart boy's suit sketched is of white galatea cloth, which has the double merit of looking well and being durable. Pale blue bands trim the sailor collar, and the tie is of black surah silk.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO

Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 90 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

The Silvermeade Hunt.

By Constance D'Arcy Mackay.

Copyrighted, 1907, by M. M. Cunningham.

It was a clear, bracing day toward the 1st of November, and from the hill which was crested by the old Lauderdale mansion could be seen a sweep of country touched by varying colors—the russet and crimson of oak and maple, the green of undulating fields and hills broken here and there by the gray of stone walls, the clear flashes of brooks or stretches of open road.

"And what a day for a hunt!" echoed Rex Tellingford, looking past Richards to where Emily Lauderdale was chattering to a group of men in red coats, checking in her horse as the hounds struggled to be off, straining at their leashes. "With every one in such good fettle it ought to be a great old race!" she laughed, tucking a strand of blue black hair beneath her riding hat.

The eyes of Richards and Tellingford met with an understanding gleam. Each was cognizant of the other's thoughts—that whoever brought back the brush that day would win a prize of far greater value. Both men knew that their future happiness depended largely on the morning's run, for Emily was a horsewoman from the tip of her riding boot to the ends of her firm gauntleted fingers. She set immeasurable store by cross country rides, daring leaps and hairbreadth escapes. To say a man could not keep his saddle was equal to Emily's mind with saying he could not keep his head.

"Though I think there are virtues equally as great as cross country riding," smiled gentle Elizabeth Lauderdale, whose love of outdoor excitement was neither so deep rooted nor of such long inheritance as Emily's.

Emily shook her head.

"Dear Aunt Elsie," she answered, "you don't in the least understand, and I'm sure I could never explain. It's bred in my bone, that's all. If I had lived in the olden days I should have had a tournament rushing of horses, clashing of spears, splintering of armor! That's what I call a wooing! No mere ambling up to demand your heart and hand! And, as I find it hard to decide between Grattan Richards and Rex Tellingford, why, fair field and fair play, and let the best man win."

Something of this headstrong resolution stirred in the girl as she turned suddenly in her saddle and glanced at the two men. Assured triumph glowed on the face of Richards. Stern determination was written on Tellingford's. She gave a little nod of satisfaction. They were well matched, these two.

The other members of the Lauderdale house party were not unaware of the drama that was being played before their eyes, and it added to the zest of the morning as the signal was given, the dogs unleashed and the cavalcade swept gayly down the hill.

"Look at that girl!" gasped Mrs. Royce Thompson, a novice who pounded in her saddle. "She's actually"—But the rest of the words were lost, for Emily was already in the distance, galloping at breakneck speed, while at her heels followed Richards and Tellingford. The rest of the hunt streamed after them. Luck seemed to favor Richards. His mare's feet scarcely touched the earth. She took fences and furrows like a winged creature. Tellingford was not so fortunate. At the brink of a stream he was forced to pause and fasten his saddle girth. Partly from excitement and partly from annoyance he fumbled with it longer than he had intended, and when he raised his head the others were already far afield, Emily Lauderdale and Richards still in the lead. The hounds had scented their quarry and were in full cry.

Tellingford considered. There was a crosscut that he had tried once before. It lay through ditches and brambles and was intersected by five bar fences. Still anything at a pinch, and he would back Fleetfoot against every mare in the county. He congratulated himself on this decision some moments later as Fleetfoot went forward at a pace that justified her name. Her course now lay across wide meadows filled with lush grass and starred here and there by purple asters and skirted by low stone walls, in whose crumbling chinks vines twisted and across whose loose stones squirrels skipped and chattered.

"Bravo, old girl!" cried Tellingford, his hand on Fleetfoot's glossy neck, gently urging her forward. At that moment there reached him sharply and piercingly the bitter cry of a child.

Tellingford drew rein. By the wall, circling a ditch that Fleetfoot was about to take, lay a small, chubby figure, one hand full of flowers.

"Pricked himself with brambles," thought Tellingford. Aloud he said:

"Cheer up, sonny! Men never cry for a scratch." He was for urging Fleetfoot on again when the inertness of the little heap by the wall smote home to him. He checked his horse and dismounted. An instant later he stood with the helpless burden in his arms. The child's yellow head rested against his shoulder. One small arm hung limp across his own. With an understanding almost human, Fleetfoot stood by the wall like a bronze statue while Tellingford mounted and then went slowly back across the meadows toward the road. The child, recovering from his stupor, began to sob. Tellingford soothed him with tender awkwardness and was guiding Fleetfoot to the first farmhouse by the roadside when a woman ran down the path leading to the door, untying her checked apron as she went. Her back was toward the approaching trio.

"Bobby," she cried, "Bobby!"

The boy stirred in Tellingford's arms.

"I think I have found your boy, madam," called Tellingford gently and in three seconds more was speeding for the village physician. The sounds of [illegible] tance.

It was afternoon when Tellingford reached the Lauderdales. From the dining room came sounds of talking and laughter. In the hall he met Emily Lauderdale. There was a look on her face that he had never seen before. "I'm awfully sorry," he began, abruptly twisting the crop of his riding whip in his hand, "but you see"—He paused and could go no further. He was a man who always found it easy to tell of the good deeds of others, but balked miserably when it came to the recital of his own. He muttered something inarticulate about loose stones, a muddy ditch and a bad fall.

Emily Lauderdale surveyed him with cool scorn.

"For a muddy fall your coat is the most conspicuously spotless garment that I have ever seen," she returned dryly.

"Oh, I say," began Tellingford, but Emily swept past him, her head held high. That he had not cared to win was evident, but that he should add to that humiliation with excuses was more than she could bear. She was glad, she told herself, that it was Grattan Richards who had come off triumphant. Yet in spite of this gladness there was a stinging mist in her eyes and a bitter catch in her throat as she sat before her dressing table that night while Katie, the maid, brushed her hair.

Everything had gone wrong that day in big things as well as in little. Even the gown she had planned to wear that evening had been left unfinished, and she was forced to reprimand Katie somewhat sharply.

Katie burst into tears. She had meant to finish it, she confessed, but that morning the child of her sister who lived on the road to the village, slipped on the muddy stones of a ditch and broke his arm, and Katie, instead of sewing on the gown, had gone to see how he fared.

"You can ask Mr. Tellingford if it's not so, ma'am," she concluded tearfully. "'Twas he that found Bobby and carried him home and went for the doctor afterward."

Of the truth of this assertion Miss Lauderdale questioned nothing.

"Do you know where Mr. Tellingford is now?" she demanded.

"Indeed I do, ma'am. He's bidden your aunt goodby and is halfway to the station."

"Then tell James to saddle Dolly Dumpling instantly and bring her to the side door."

Katie gasped and obeyed, while Emily Lauderdale, throwing a scarf about her shoulders, ran down the stairs to the driveway, her silken dinner gown swishing at every step.

Tellingford meantime rode toward the station, his lips set in a thin hard line. He found himself mentally repeating his morning's advice to Bobby. "Men never cry at a scratch," when behind him came the flying gallop of hoofs. Tellingford was blank with amazement at the vision of Emily Lauderdale, hatless and coatless and in evening dress, tearing down the road. Straight alongside the cart she came and held out her hand.

"If you can forgive and forget," she panted, "and if you still care"—

"Care!" cried Tellingford, jerking off his overcoat and wrapping it about her after she had impetuously slipped from her horse and clambered into the cart. "All I can say is, 'Heaven bless Bobby!'"

And the flaxen haired young person in a suit of white satin was page at a wedding in the spring.

Hard to Determine.

"I've taken deposits over this same counter for more years than I'd like to own up to," said the receiving teller in a downtown savings bank, "and I've made quite a study of reading faces, too, but just the same I never can tell by looking at a man whether he's going to deposit money or draw some out. Sometimes the shabbiest man in the line will pull out a big wad of bills to deposit, while a stylishly dressed woman right behind him will want to draw out a couple of dollars. It would take a clairvoyant to tell what was going to happen, and just for curiosity I sometimes cast an eye down the line trying to size up the different people, but it never does any good. I remember a very rugged man coming in once and depositing $200 in coin and small bills, and right behind him was a fashionably dressed woman who deposited $1. I always remember this instance, as the persons were in such direct contrast."—New York Sun.

Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists small free Trial Boxes of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing certainly, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of real, genuine merit. But that article must possess true merit, else the test will condemn, rather than advance it. Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing antiseptic balm, put up in beautiful nickel capped glass jars at 50c. Such soothing agents as Oil Eucalyptus, Thymol, Menthol, etc., are incorporated into a velvety cream like Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Shoop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means also use internally, Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Stomach distress, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, biliousness, bad taste, etc. surely call for Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

A SEARCHLIGHT.

Some Questions For Women to Ask Themselves.

Ask yourself these:

Am I too negative, too compliant? Do I not need to cultivate positiveness in my character?

Do I confuse foolish sentimentality with a strong, self respecting, ennobling affection?

Are my ideals so impracticable that they never enter into my actual life and beautify the real things around me?

Do I belittle myself with the petty idea that housework is degrading? Am I so blind that I cannot see that it is the character and not the scrubbing brush that sets the standard?

Have I tried to make my voice as musical as possible, and is my desire to look well a sincere wish to give pleasure to others?

Am I strong and courageous enough to remain single, rather than compromise in marriage by giving my trust to a man I cannot honestly admire and respect?

Do I try to keep myself alert and interesting by keeping in touch with the movements of the day and understanding civic and governmental affairs? Or do I confine myself wholly to the reading of the bargains and murder trials?

Am I content to stand exactly where I stood a year ago? Or is it my ideal in life to work on toward a more patient wisdom and a wider life every day?

Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in acquiring the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

How to Fry.

To fry food properly a deep pan is needed, with a wire frying basket of a proper size to fit it. Fat is also needed in sufficient quantity to allow the articles fried to be completely immersed in it. The success of the process depends upon the temperature and purity of the fat.

In ordinary households a constant supply of the best possible frying medium, properly clarified fat, ought to be always at hand. All fat, cooked or uncooked; all skimmings from soups or gravies, all scraps of fat, must be collected and cut into small pieces. Then, with water in the proportion of a quarter of a pint to each pound of fat, they must be rapidly boiled in a covered saucepan, the lid being removed after boiling point is reached; and the cooking continue till not the faintest bubble is seen. Then only is it free from moisture and ready to be strained through a cloth into a basin, where when cool it will be a firm, compact mass of absolutely pure fat.

When wanted for cooking it must be placed in a deep saucepan quite an hour before it is needed to heat gradually and thoroughly, so that at the right moment it may be raised quickly to smoking point, at which the blue smoke is a signal that it is ready for food to be cooked in it.

The articles to be fried must be placed in the frying basket, a few at a time and not touching each other, and gently lowered into the fat, where they remain until they are a faint lemon color, ready to be drained over the pan for a few moments and afterward set in the open oven or on the hot plate on paper to drain thoroughly. When frying articles requiring longer cooking the pan should be moved to a cooler part of the stove after the first few moments, so that cooking goes on slowly. They are then drained as above. It must be remembered that fat must be raised to smoking point again before fresh articles are placed in it.

All greasiness of fried foods is caused by the fat being below smoking heat. When it is absolutely boiling it causes an invisible crust to form instantly, which not only prevents the fat entering, but the flavor from leaving, the food cooked in it.

Fat may be used again and again, but it must be clarified afresh after each using. A slice of raw potato placed in it will clear it, and it must still be strained through a cloth into a basin again. When it becomes much discolored by frequent use it should be melted, then mixed with water and carbonate of soda (half a teaspoonful to one quart of water) and boiled for half an hour, skimming thoroughly and setting aside till cold. Then cut up, scraping off all impurities, and clarify as before with water, boiling until all has evaporated, when clear fat will remain to be strained off.

RAN THROUGH RAPIDS

CANADIAN WINS $1,000 BY FEAT OF RECKLESS DARING.

Negotiated Big Horn Canyon for First Time in History—Boat Overturned Five Times in Awful Maelstroms—Feat Thought to Be Impossible — Fearful Gorge Called "Waters of Death."

A nervy Canadian has recently succeeded in making the passage of the dreaded Big Horn Canyon, winning $1,000 in gold and successfully accomplishing a feat which has heretofore been considered impossible by the Americans, a feat in which at least a dozen men have lost their lives. Where the Big Horn River breaks through the mountains in the terrible canyon, the Indians, many years ago, gave it the name of the "Waters of Death," and the fearful gorge has deserved that name both in looks and in fact.

W. C. Harned is the Canadian who made the successful trip. Harned was for many years a boatman on the rapids in the St. Lawrence river, and was known as the most proficient of all the guides there. But he drifted west and settled down in Shoshoni, from whence he made the start through the canyon which lies between that town and Thermopolis.

The Bet Made.

Two months ago Col. George M. Sliney, a banker of Thermopolis, in speaking of the canyon, made the statement that it was impossible for a human being to ever pass through there and live to tell of it.

"You're wrong there, colonel," drawled Harned. "I've gone through places just as bad as the Big Horn Canyon, and I can go through there."

"You've won my $100 if you do," promptly replied the colonel, and the bet was on.

Harned secured the assistance of an old frontiersman and guide, now a business man of Shoshoni, named Winne, and the two went to work to build a boat which would withstand almost anything. Poplar and oak were used, and after the skiff was put together, it was sheeted from stem to stern with the heaviest cowhide.

Whole Town Turns Out.

The whole town of Shoshoni, at the head of the canyon, was at the river when the start was made. No one expected to see either of the men again.

The only Indian legend of an attempt to pass through the "Waters of Death" was made multitudes of moons ago, when a young Sioux chief, having won the love of a Shoshoni maiden, stole his sweetheart from the tepees of her people and attempted to escape with her. They were pursued and their escape by land being cut off, the intrepid Red lover and his bride took to the water in a dugout and attempted to run the rapids of the canyon. The following day the pieces of the boat were picked up along the bank below the canyon. The bodies were not found.

In 1869 three white trappers embarked in a canoe on the torrents, and several days later all three bodies were recovered near Thermopolis.

At several different times since then foolhardy frontiersmen have attempted the passage, and every one has paid for his rashness with his life.

Inferno For 12 Miles.

So, when the crowd at the river bade farewell to Harned and Winne, they never expected to see them again. Some portions of the lower part of the canyon have been explored, but for 12 miles not a soul ever saw one foot of the canyon's way, and lived to tell of it. For these 12 miles the river averages 400 feet in width, and rushes between precipitous rock walls from 600 to 3,000 feet high. The current is from 10 to 25 miles an hour, and is a veritable inferno of maelstroms, whirlpools, cataracts, cross currents with jagged rocks, sharp, savage and submerged throughout the entire length. The canyon ends a few miles above Thermopolis.

The skiff left Shoshoni at 10 o'clock in the morning, the departure being telephoned to Thermopolis. Practically the entire population of the latter town went at once to the canyon's mouth to await the coming of the dead bodies of the adventures.

Bruised and Bleeding.

At 5 o'clock that afternoon the boat shot out of the black jaws of the canyon. Both men were utterly exhausted. They were cut and bruised and bleeding, wet to the skin, but still full of fight.

Five separate times did their boat overturn, throwing the voyagers into the frightful waters. Three times Harned saved the life of Winne, and twice did Winne pull Harned in after the latter was almost dead. Nothing but the heavy cowskin sheeting saved their lives dozens of times. The rocks were unable to puncture this covering, and the light skiff rode the waters with ease where no rocks appeared. The canyon had been conquered, "but we don't want any more of it," said Harned.

Made Purse $1,000.

Col. Sliney was one of the party which helped haul the cowskin boat ashore. Instead of handing over the $100 agreed upon, the colonel threw a bag containing $1,000 in gold into the skiff, and then, with the two men still in the boat, it was lifted on broad shoulders and carried through the town, followed by a brass band and every citizen of the little city.

Scourge of Wolves.

Word received from Fort Chippewyan, at Winnipeg, indicates that wolves are becoming a positive scourge in the far north. An Indian woman and two children had been dragged out of their tepee and devoured. Deer and other animals are being depleted by the packs. The Indians refuse to kill them, even under the inducement of the $20 bounty, owing to superstition and a belief in the transmigration of souls.

The same despatch says that the police are close on the trail of Fischry, the half-breed swindler, wanted on a charge of forgery and embezzling $35,000.

American Party Returning

On Saturday a party of well pleased Americans arrived at the Snowden House after a week's outing with Mine Host Tom Eastwood of Buckhorn. This party were loud in their praises of the beauty and fishing of our northern lakes. They were Mr and Mrs. Karl H. Krippendorf, child and maid, Mrs. Charles Krippendorf, Miss Krippendorf of Cincinnati, O., and Miss Frey of Colorado Springs. They left for home on the 11.45 train.

LABOR IS DISSATISFIED WITH LAURIER

His Reply Does Not Suit--Delegates at Winnipeg Conference Declare That They will Even Up at Elections Over Jap Question

Winnipeg, Sept 23.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's reply to the Trades and Labor Congress precipitated a red-hot debate at the closing session of the convention Saturday afternoon, in which the members rode roughshod over the premier.

In no uncertain language they expressed their dissatisfaction at the non-committal reply and resolved, amid great enthusiasm, to give their answer to Sir Wilfrid at the polls next election.

A sensation was created at the convention when it was discovered, in the course of a discussion of a resolution to have principles of trade unionism introduced into all Dominion and provincial parliaments, and to take steps to have open shops abolished, that P. M. Draper, paid secretary of the congress, is foreman in the government printing offices at Ottawa, which is not an organized union shop.

Secretary Draper's long explanation created an uneasy feeling in minds of sceptical ones.

"Suppose that the treaty with Japan was abrogated and Japanese forces should attempt to enforce the entry of Japanese coolies into British Columbia, what would be the position of union men be if that entry should have to be opposed by force?" asked P. M. Draper.

James Simpson, vice-president of the congress, will accompany W. R. Trotter of Winnipeg to the convention of the American Federation of Labor in Norfolk, Virginia, Nov. 13. He will ask the Trades and Labor Council of Toronto to invite the American Federation to hold their 1908 convention in Toronto.

A Greater Quebec, Says Gouin---He will Annex Ungava

Montreal, Sept. 23.—Premier Gouin of this province announced at a political meeting at Longueuil yesterday afternoon that his new program included a demand for the annexation to Quebec Province of the whole immense territory of Ungava, which would make this by far the largest province of the Dominion.

Premier Gouin pointed out that the territory of Ungava was entirely separated from all the other provinces by great inland seas, and offered no advantages to any of them except Quebec, so there could be no objection to its annexation. This province, he contended, was in a better position than the Ottawa government to administer the district of Ungava.

He intimated that Mr. Bourassa had been jockeying for a provincial portfolio, and when he found he could not get it he had started his campaign against the provincial government.

The meeting was a very large one fully six thousand people attending it, and the Ungava announcement was loudly cheered.

Police Court

It seems as though the Duncan family, that is this particular branch of that extensive clan, is in trouble again. A few days ago Mrs. Wm. Duncan, Sherbrooke street, who has been acting as scrub woman at a local hotel, "copped" a fan with a gold chain attached at the hotel. The police were put on the case, and Saturday night P. C. Meharry, visited the residence of Mrs. Duncan, and succeeded in finding the chain, which is the property of one of the boarders at the hotel.

Mrs. Duncan will probably be brought to court to answer to the charge of theft.

Slight Delay on George Street Cars

As P. C. Newhall and a number of others including our informant were coming north on George street on a street car, the car in question, at Charlotte street, seemed to bound into the air and make for the east side of the street. The street railway traffic was delayed for some time, but finally the car was again placed on the rails and was soon again on its way up George street.

A TIP TO INVESTORS

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION" INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP, which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use, millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs neither boosting nor boasting, for if we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present advice is becoming easier almost immediately wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

A Quick Return on Ocean Liner

P. C. Newhall Returns Home on Over Crowded Ship

Yesterday the many friends of Mr. S. Newhall, who have for the past six weeks missed him from duty on the local police force, were glad to once more welcome this efficient officer back in our midst. It will be remembered by our readers that six weeks and some three or four days ago this officer left for a vacation to England and incidentally Liverpool, his old home. Mr. Newhall yesterday noted that he had had a most enjoyable trip and spent a most agreeable time with relatives in England. He said that the home trip to Quebec was one of the roughest he has, in his long experience, ever met with. Mr. Newhall said, as formerly noted in these columns, that whilst in Liverpool, he accidentally met Mr. R. B. Munro, proprietor of the Munro House, and took him out to see the great salt works in that vicinity. Mr. Newhall will resume work on the force in a day or two.

It might be mentioned that Mr. Newhall on arrival in Liverpool first thought of his duty in Peterborough, and thusly how to get back. In Liverpool on arrival, he met a brother of his who holds a high position on the steamers sailing to India. To him, our Mr. Newhall told his desire for an assured return. His brother replied, "I am going to Glasgow tonight and I will see the Allen office people, and do what I can." Next morning the Allan Line offices had a telegram from Scotland insuring Sam of a passage by the steamship Virginian. Mr. Chas. James sailed on the same steamer and is looking much better for the trip.

Mr. Chas. Dusty is Home

Mr Chas. Dusty of the Queen's Hotel, has returned after a two weeks' holiday. Mr. Dusty remarked yesterday. "I tell you straight I had the time of my life. I was with my son-in-law Mr. Hammond, the Lindsay water works manager in his gasoline yacht. We went all over those upper lakes, that is Surgeon, Pigeon and I don't know what other lakes we didn't visit. The folks used to leave me sometimes at home, to fish and I tell you I used to haul out more bass than the whole crowd with all their dinky canoes and launch."

Montreal, Sept. 23.—The Dominion Iron & Steel Company has issued a supplementary report; the same to be presented to shareholders at the annual meeting on October 9.

In this report claims for damages against the Coal Company are placed at $1,796,000, the item being, Paid for extra cost of coal purchased from Dominion Coal Co., $826,000; paid for extra cost of coal purchased from others, $356,000; damages due to short deliveries, $132,000; damages on stoppage of deliveries, $479,000.

This statement gives the earnings of the first three months of the present fiscal year on the basis of the contract price for coal. They show the net to be $515,000, after deducting the sum of $189,000 for sinking fund and interest on first mortgage bonds. This shows net earnings at the rate of 0.30 per cent on the common stock.

Consideration, however must be taken of the fact that the Steel Company are counting their cost against the Coal Co., as already won, and the money in their pockets, in place of a litigation which will extend over a long period of time.

Priest Planned Control of Oil Fields

Detroit, Sept. 23.—An ambition to control the Tilbury oil fields is said to have been the cause of the financial adventures of Father Grunenwald, the former Detroit priest, who confessed to losing large sums borrowed from the members of St. Mary's parish.

The formation of the Clinton Petroleum Company was undertaken as an enterprise in furtherance of his plans according to Dr. Karl Rheinhardt a promoter with whom the priest was associated, and who claims that their intentions were honest.

TOLD OF GEOLOGY.

Dr. Rheinhardt said:

"I was told of the remarkable geological formations underlying Tilbury, and we—Father Grunenwald, myself and certain others—formed a syndicate for their exploitation. Contrary to all the rules and laws of business, I allowed sentiment to creep into the deal. The father was anxious to found a parish school, and I, gave my word that I would help him realize that ambition. We had no land in Tilbury, nor so much as the scratch of a pen on paper to start with, so first we had to secure leases and then incorporate, which we did. Father Grunenwald and I agreed to so manipulate the transactions that we could retain 51 per cent. of the company's stock, and thus control the entire deal. We began drilling operations, and I went to Cleveland to secure enough money to buy and combine all the oil wells in the Tilbury field. That was our scheme. Our well was a 'dry' one, but I can't figure out that I was responsible for the fact that there was no oil in the oil. I knew nothing about where he got his money. He had two brothers himself were anxious to secure for our in Pennsylvania whom he wished in the company, and I supposed they put up part of the $5000. I didn't know anything about any borrowing on the father's part, until I read of it in the papers a day or two ago. I told Father Grunenwald to tell those of his parishioners who took stock that they were going into a speculation and not an investment, because if he had told them he was investing their money they could have held him. But in a speculation of course, it's different; everyone takes his own chances in a speculation such as our venture at Tilbury."

NOT OUT OUT FOR CROOK.

When asked from what point he came to Detroit, Dr. Rheinhardt said with a shrug: "I am a promoter. I came from New Orleans, Boston, New York and South Africa. Like other promoters, I am here today and gone tomorrow. I have been in Detroit nearly a year which is longer than I have stayed in the States for some time past. I've lost millions of dollars, but that is no one's business but mine. Had I not been pledged to help Father Grunenwald I could have made thousands of dollars—understand—thousands of dollars. My friendship for him is what has kept me in America and broke me, but I have other friends here who will stand behind me. To some of them I owe money, but they will stay with me until I am on my feet again. All would have been well had I not have allowed sentiment to enter into my business dealings. I may not have been cut out for a fool, but I was not cut out for a crook.

WANTED CONTROLLING INTEREST

"Both Father Grunenwald and myselves the controlling interest in the Tilbury deal, as I said before, as it was thought best to have the latter interest his people himself, as they had confidence in him and did not know me. One of my people from the east put up $2100 for the drilling work and I allowed all my commission for promotion to go in as a part of my share.

"Subsequently my wife needed medical treatment and the father advanced me sums of money from time to time for my own personal use. For these loans, I transfered to him as security portions of my stock interests in the Clinton Petroleum Company, and just think where he would have been if we had struck one of those subterranean lakes of oil which produce more than the Standard Oil Company could give in a year. He would have had a big pile of money in return for the small amounts he loaned me, and I—well, I would have probably been in about the same position I am now—financially. A man is a fool to mix up sentiment and business."

Port Hope, Sept. 23.—Considerable interest is being manifested here over Scattergood's attempt to cover the Port Hope-Toronto trip within the 24 hours, and Port Hope's veteran pedestrian, Jimmy Reynolds is greatly worked up over it. Reynolds' first one-way walk to Toronto was accomplished in 19 1-2 hours, on a 24-hour limit. His second attempt, last June, to cover the round trip in 38 hours, was almost successful, but, owing to the extreme heat, Reynolds gave out at Newcastle on the return journey after having covered 110 miles in 32 1-2 hours, thus leaving him 5 1-2 hours to travel the remaining 18 miles from Newcastle to Port Hope. Reynolds today offers to bet $300 to $500 that he can cover the round trip between Port Hope and Toronto in 35 hours, and wants to start tomorrow morning, when Scattergood reaches Port Hope. Reynolds is in his 57th year and Scattergood is said to be only 24. Reynolds' latest offer cuts three hours off his last wager.

Pottsville, Pa., Sept. 24.—A windstorm of cyclonic force, accompanied by sharp lightning, visited part of Schuylkill county late yesterday with the result that four persons were fatally injured, seven were seriously hurt, and a half hundred others were wounded by the falling of a grand stand at Heggins, near here. The fatally injured are;

Howard Yoder of Heggings, aged 16 years.

Gordon Miller of Gordon, 18 years.

Chas. Ney, Valleyview.

Andrew Koppenhaver, Sacramento.

The accident happened at the county fair of the Heggins Grange during a baseball game. The grand stand was packed to its capacity. During the game rain started to fall, and many of the spectators sought shelter under the stand. Soon a funnel-shaped cloud was seen coming from the west, traveling with great velocity. The whirling [illegible] stand and crushed it.

More than a hundred persons were beneath the stand, and when rescuers reached them, it was found that more than half of them had been injured. A dozen physicians were summoned, and they attended the injured at farm houses nearby. The grandstand was completely wrecked.

Remanded Until Friday

Only one case was tried at yesterday's session of the police court when a local citizen was charged with having been drunk and disorderly in a public place. He replied when asked "Are you guilty or not guilty?" I may have been drunk but it was not in a public place, it was in my own private house. He explained that his wife had snatched a watch out of his pocket and he called her a few names. He asked for bail, but it seems his wife wanted to see him in the straight and narrow path of sobriety, and vetoed the offer of a friend to put up bonds for the prisoner, who was remanded until Friday.

Bad Attack of Appendicitis

Mr. Fred Howson, 23 years of age, son of Mr. Geo Howson, of this city, who was brought to the city a few days ago from Port Hope on account of an attack of appendicitis, to the Nicholls hospital. Enquiries at the hospital yesterday, elicited the information that he had been operated upon, late Saturday afternoon, and while his case is a very serious one, he is progressing as well as could be hoped for in view of the serious nature of the disease.

Large List of Entries

In conversation with President Leary of the Peterborough Exhibition yesterday, The Times learned that nothing but adverse weather can prevent the fair of this year being the best and most successful in the history of this city. Mr. Leary noted that over 2000 entries of exhibits have already been handed into the secretary. Mr. Leary further remarked that already over four times the space required for teams and beef exhibits has been secured over all former years. Practically the whole ground to the front has been secured by those intending to place canvas. With this one feature under consideration and the acknowledged fact that the attractions, irrespective of actual exhibits is of the highest grade, it is assured that Peterborough will redeem herself from insinuations made in the past that this city cannot run a successful fall fair.

CAPTAIN AND CREW OF FIVE PERISHED

Sault Ste Marie, Ont., Sept. 24.—Meagre details of the sinking of the freighter Alexander Nimick have reached here. The captain, Frank Bertrand, and five of the crew went down with the ship, which sank near Vermillion Point, Lake Superior, on Thursday last, with fifteen hundred tons of soft coal.

The lost steamer, which was owned by the Gilchrist Transporting Company of Cleveland, was 298 feet in length and forty in beam, was built in 1890, and had a crew of fifteen men. No information as to what caused the sinking or the ship, the names of the men who perished or how the remainder of the crew escaped has reached the Soo.

A MESSAGE FROM ONE OF THE CREW.

Buffalo, N.Y., Sept. 24.—At the office of the Seamen's Union here, it was said today that two of the crew of the steamer Alex Nimick, lost off White Point, were shipped here. They were Harry Holman, of Chicago and a salt water sailor name unknown.

Charles Gray, of Buffalo, was engineer, and James Hurley, of Buffalo, was assistant engineer. Last night a message was received from Hurley, saying; "I am late from Nimmick wreck. Engineer Gray with me."

Will Operate 500 Miles of the G. T. P. This Fall.

Ottawa, Sept. 24. — Judge Pearl Wilson of Cranbrook, has been appointed to the chairmanship of the Board of Investigation into the matters at issue between the Canadian Consolidated Smelting and Copper Co., and its employes.

Collingwood Schreiber, chief consulting engineer of the Dominion, is in receipt of definite assurance from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway that the line will be in operation this fall from Winnipeg to Saskatoon, a distance of about five hundred miles.

Defect in Cord Nine Was the Cause of Bridge Disaster?

Quebec, Sept. 23.—Saturday's evidence before the royal commission investigating the Quebec bridge collapse is important as indicating that some bridge experts at all events attribute the disaster to the deflection in chord No. 9 or the anchor arm.

Mr. Hoare, the chief engineer of the Quebec Bridge Company, gave it as his opinion, when pressed by the commission, that the disaster was due to this defect, although he hesitated at first to hazard the opinion, because his investigation on the site had not enabled him to definitely ascertain the cause.

The vertical pillars might either or them have given way, though it was his opinion that No. 9 chord was at fault. These pillars either collapsed first or received the worst treatment in the fall, for there was evidence of almost complete destruction of the main post and bottom chords.

On the other hand there was nothing in the tension braces or general connections to indicate the cause of the disaster. And the riveting, with a few exceptions, was still good.

Mr. Hoare was instructed to prepare plans of the present condition of the chief members of the bridge for the commission.

Is Chatham at Mercy of a Fire Fiend?

Chatham, Sept. 23.—The sawmill of W. M. Drader, Brooke and Catherine streets, caught fire from some unknown cause at 11 o'clock yesterday morning and burned to the ground.

On Friday Drader's planing mill, located in another section of the city, burned down, and through all this damage to Mr Drader's local interests he cannot be communicated with, being away on a business trip.

The fire yesterday morning was of the spectacular sort, the flames reaching as high as 70 feet above the ground. The heat and smoke were intense. The fire brigade responded promptly, but owing to a bridge closely being blocked on account of the approaches being paved, a long detour had to be made in reaching the scene of the conflagration, entailing a loss of ten minutes or more. By the time the firemen arrived, every inch of the big mill was in flames and the neighborhood was in danger. It required two hours of strenuous activity to control the flames and two additional hours before the last spark was out.

A large lumber yard adjoining the mill was saved after a portion of it had been burned. A scarcity of hose was apparent, as only four lines could be played on the flames from the nearest hydrants some blocks distant.

A number of firemen sustained more or less slight injuries. James Keely, being knocked out by a flying timber, George Deline falling through a dry kiln and getting his leg hurt, Walter Keely getting a fingernail pulled out of place and Fire Chief Pritchard getting his hand burned. The most seriously injured was a little girl, daughter of Pete Toulouse, who, while looking on, fell and received an awful gash on her foot, the sharp teeth of a log saw cutting to the bone.

To check a cold quickly, get from your druggist some little Candy Cold Tablets called Preventics. Druggists everywhere are now dispensing Preventics, for they are not only safe, but decidedly certain and prompt. Preventics contain no quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh nor sickening. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will prevent pneumonia, bronchitis, la grippe, etc. Breathe the mint Preventics. 48 Preventics 25 cents. Trial boxes 5 cents. Sold by all dealers.

News Briefs

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 25 — United States Senator S. H. Piles has telegraphed direct to President Roosevelt asking the executive to send a revenue cutter to Bristol Bay to rescue 160 white fishermen and 200 Chinese, said to have been wrecked there when the fishing boat John Currier went ashore on the rocks on August 9. A party was got away to send word of the distress of 360 men and to appeal for aid. The men had supplies sufficient to last them for thirty days, but that time has expired, and the fishermen are in distress.

London, Sept. 24.—The investigations yesterday rather favored the idea that a strike of the railway employes will be averted. Mr. Beth, M.P., the leader of the strike movement, addressing a large body of railway men at Cardiff yesterday adopted a very moderate tone. He explained that even if a ballot of the workingmen favored a strike the men would not be called out immediately, but renewed efforts would be made to induce the railway directors to reconsider their decision not to grant the demands of the men. He realized, he said, that a strike would be a terrible calamity, and declared that he intended to exhaust every means to arrive at a peaceful solution of the trouble.

LORD STRATHCONA'S VIEW.

All-Red Line Would Greatly Benefit Canada.

Lord Strathcona, who recently arrived from England, talked on a number of questions of interest to Canadians.

The all-red mail route was the first question that came up, and Lord Strathcona declared himself an enthusiastic advocate of the project.

"It would be a great thing," he said, "not only for Canada, but also for all parts of the Empire, and I earnestly hope to see it an accomplished fact. The establishment of an eight-day service between Liverpool and Vancouver, which would be the result of it, would cause large quantities of foreign capital to flow into the country. Many people who are now deterred by the length of time necessary for the journey from going so far west as the coast would with the establishment of the new service be led to do so, and the sight of the great resources of the prairie region would lead them to invest their capital in Canada rather than in foreign countries.

When asked as to the object of his present summer trip, following within a comparatively short space of time his visit in the winter, Lord Strathcona intimated that it was chiefly undertaken in connection with his business concerns. "Some official matters will be the subject of conference with members of the Government," he observed, "but there are business affairs that will take me some weeks, probably, and I cannot say at present how long I may remain."

As to immigration, he thought the results, so far as Canada was concerned, were most gratifying. More immigrants were coming to Canada in a week now than there were in a year when he first came to the country, 70 years ago, in the days of the old sailing ships.

TROUBLE OVER ALL-RED.

Premier Fears Its Support by Lord Elgin and Lloyd-George.

The News of the World, referring to the all-red route, states that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's determined espousal of the scheme is causing the Home Government discomfort. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's support is half-hearted because he fears to wreck the Cabinet, as Mr. Asquith, the man with the purse, and other heavyweights in the Government are strongly opposed. On the other hand, Mr. Lloyd-George and Lord Elgin are as warmly in favor of the scheme, and it is possible the latter may resign if the whole scheme is negatived. The News of the World alleges that the opinion of Imperial statesmen here is that while Canada stands to benefit greatly by carrying through the proposal, the advantages to the Mother Country are not so obvious. The paper adds that efforts are now being concentrated on the Atlantic section of the route.

Gen. J. W. Laurie writes The Times, pointing out that Canada, by furnishing the garrisons and maintaining the docks at Halifax and Esquimalt, relieves the Mother Country to a greater extent than Australia. He adds that as Canada unites with her all the other British possessions in North America, the West Indies may hope that she may assume similar responsibilities throughout that part of the Empire.

Too Many Bluffs.

There continue to be reports of immigrants arriving in Canada who would have been better left at home. The idea that this country is suited to the needs and conditions of any and every class of people in one that should be set right by the Dominion Immigration Department. More harm than good is done Canada by promiscuous advertising of its advantages [illegible] way. They is, to be sure, almost unlimited work here to be done, but it is not the kind of work for which every man is by nature and training fitted. It may be taken for granted that it would have been better for the man who has given up an assistant professorship in an English school and who is now working on the streets of Edmonton if he had stayed in England; he is a misfit here. And these have been not a few such.

For the men who will go out on the farms and who are prepared to contribute of their muscle to the upbuilding of the country, and incidentally of their own fortunes, and for those who are ready to undertake the back-breaking toil of railway building and other such-like employment, there is abundant room in Canada; but the clerks, and professional men, and the majority of mechanics would do better to stay away yet awhile. There is not a demand for their class of labor, and it is not fair that they should be entrced here by misleading promises and allurements.—Edmonton Journal.

A BOY HUNT.

Chased From Hedge to Hedge by a Big Pack of Weasels.

The following extract from an interesting book may be of interest to our friends. It is "From My Life as an Angler," by William Henderson, published in London in 1879.

"About this time, while rambling in the picturesque lane leading from Merrington to Windlestone with two other boys, an adventure occurred sufficiently startling to two little fellows from nine to ten years old. We were busily engaged in picking wild strawberries, which clustered in the hedgerows, when we saw at about a hundred yards distance a pack of at least twenty weasels running from hedge to hedge and evidently scenting out footsteps. It flashed upon us that we were being hunted. So, springing over the nearest hedge, we ran across a pasture field and, standing upon the farther bank, looked back toward our assailants. To our dismay we saw the whole pack, with noses to ground, steadily tracking our course. The word was given, 'Run, run!' and off we scampered across another field to take up our position on another hedge. Still the pursuit was going on, and the creatures were evidently gaining upon us, so with a wild shout we fled to the village, which, happily for us, was not far off. I have frequently heard of persons being attacked by weasels, but was never hunted by them on any other occasion."

The above must have occurred about 1812, the locality being the north of England.—Forest and Stream.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Showing the Successive Changes in the English Language.

Few scholars even are aware of the great changes through which the English language has passed in successive centuries. Following are specimens of the Lord's Prayer as used at various periods in English history:

A. D. 1158—Fader ur heune, halewelde beith thi neune, cumin thi kuneriche, thy will beoth idon in heune and in erthe. The euryeu dawe bried, gif ous thilk dawe. And yorzif uer detters as vi yoursifen ure dettours. And leue us nought into temtation, bot delyvor eus of evel. Amen.

A. D. 1300—Fader ure in heavene, halewyn be thi name, thi kingdom come, they wille be done as in hevene and earthe. Oua urche days bred give us to daye. And forgive oure detes as we forgive oure dettoures. And lead us nor in temptation, bote delyveour us of yvil. Amen.

A. D. 1370—Oure fadir that art in heunes, hallowid be thi name, thi kingdom come to, be thi wille done in earthe as in heune, geve to us this oure bred oure other substance forgene to use oure detils as we forgauen to oure detouris, lede us not into temptation, but delyeur us yvel. Amen.

A. D. 1524—O oure father which arte in heven, hallowed by thy name. Let thy kingdom come. They wyoll be fulfilled as well in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this daye oure dayly brede. And forgive us our trespaces even as we forgive our trespacers. And lead us not into temptation, but delyver us from evell. Fyr thyne is the kindome and the power and the glorye for ever. Amen.

A. D. 1561—Our father which are in heauen, santified by thy name. Let thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heauen, in earth also. Give us today our superstantial bread. And forgive us our dettes as we forgive our detters. And lead us not into temptation. But delivere us from evil. Amen.

A. D. 1711—Our father which are in heauen, hallowed by thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heauen. Give us this day our dayley bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thyne is the kindome, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

A New Orleans Dish.

The greatest, the most toothsome and sustaining of all dishes is the gombo file one encounters in New Orleans—not at public eating houses, but in private residences. It is a strange yet halcyon compound of five different integers, each cooked separately and afterward joined in a most delectable and fragrant mess. There are fried chicken, broiled bacon, stewed oysters, peppers and smothered onions, all prepared with unutterable skill. These one by one are emptied into a pot of most celestial "stock," and then when the conglomeration is complete for service the presiding genius of the kitchen pours into the ecstatic confection a shower of fine green dust—the powdered leaf of the sassafras—and there you have a plate that would have made Lucullus gasp in simple wonder. There is none like it nor shall be till our summers are deceased.

Hammers.

Hammers are represented on the monuments of Egypt twenty centuries before our era. They greatly resembled the hammer now in use, save that there were no claws on the back for the extraction of nails. The first hammer was undoubtedly a stone held in the hand. Claw hammers were invented some time during the middle ages. Illuminated manuscripts of the eleventh century represent carpenters with claw hammers. Hammers are of all sizes, from the dainty instruments used by the jeweler, which weigh less than half an ounce, to the gigantic fifty ton hammer of shipbuilding establishments, some of which weigh as much as fifty tons and have a falling force of from ninety to a hundred. Every trade has its own hammer and its own way of using it.

Queer Weather Forecasting.

One of the rites performed by the French peasants on New Year's eve is the forecasting of the weather for the coming year by means of onions. When the bells ring for midnight mass they scoop out the middles of twelve onions, set them in a row on the kitchen table, fill them with salt and name them for the months of the year. Then when they return from mass they examine the condition of the salt. If it has melted in any of the "months," those months will be rainy; if the salt remains dry, it indicates drought; if half melted, the first fortnight of the month will be wet. The peasants have such implicit faith in this means of forctelling the weather that they plant their crops in accordance with the prophecy of the onions.

The Iron Law of Caste.

As an illustration of the exclusiveness of caste, which a native of India will do almost anything to preserve, it might be mentioned that when money passes between a low caste and a high caste man the coin is thrown on the ground by the one and picked up by the other for fear of defilement. They may not stand on the same carpet or enter the same room. Neither must the low caste man cross the threshold of his superior's house or hut. If he wants to communicate with him he stands outside and bawls.

An Invitation.

"Mabel," he said, "I love you. I place my happiness in your hands"—

"For goodness sake," she cried pleadingly, "don't do it now!"

"Why not?"

"Because I'm quite sure I'll need both hands in a minute or so to keep you from kissing me."

An Adage Vindicated.

"Where there's so much smoke there must be some fire."

The boss was speaking. He had just detected the office boy consuming a cigarette on the premises.

The adage was verified immediately. The boy got the fire.

The Very Worst.

Schoolmistress—Now, tell me the truth, Johnny Jones. You know what will happen if you tell a lie, don't you?

Johnny Jones—Yes, ma'am; I'll go to a bad place. Schoolmistress—Yes, and that isn't the worst of it. You'll also be expelled from school.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2000 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2,500 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 760 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000 - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont.,
are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

What Esnah's Father Did.

By HAROLD CHRISTY.

Copyrighted, 1907, by P. C. Eastment.

"I may have saved your life," declared Avice earnestly.

"What's life when your boots are muddy and no chance to get them cleaned?" scoffed Ned Hastings. "I'd rather take chances on walking under a ladder than going out in the muddy street to escape the hoodoo."

"I think you're horrid," pouted Avice. "Next time I shall let you go under the ladder if you want to, but don't blame me for what happens."

"Next time you'll do just the same," he declared, with a laugh. "I never saw any one quite so superstitious in my life."

"You must have spilled salt," said Avice dolorously, "and you never threw any over your left shoulder. I just know that there is going to be a quarrel."

"Not unless we meet with more ladders over the sidewalk," he laughed, "or some other of your numerous signs of evil luck."

It was a tactful remark well qualified to fulfill Avice's prophecy, but at that moment the girl darted forward and picked something from the sidewalk.

"It's the best kind of luck to find money on a Monday," she declared. "It means that you will gain all the week."

"It's good luck to find a pocketbook on the 1st of April," he scoffed. "It means you will be fooled for a year."

It was fortunate for Hastings that the girl did not hear him. Superstition was a dangerous subject between them. Hastings would not confess to his few little superstitions and was intolerant of her lore of signs and omens. Once she had declined his offer of marriage because he spoke on one of her unlucky days, and when he had again put his fate to the test on a day guaranteed by the almanac to be most lucky she had recalled the couplet about a change of name though not of letter being a change for worse and not for better and had said "No," though her heart cried "Yes."

Just now she was too busy examining the contents of the pocketbook to give heed to his flings. There were two five-dollar bills, a two and two ones. The rest of the bulk was made up of papers covered with strange characters that neither could make out. There was not a scrap of paper to show the name of the owner.

"Maybe they are charms," said Avice in an awed voice.

"It's not Hebrew," said the more practical Hastings. "It may be Arabic. I saw some writing once that looked like that."

"We must advertise it," she announced. "It belongs to some mystic, and there is no telling what may happen."

"He should be clever enough to find it himself if he is a wonder worker," scoffed Hastings. "I'll bet he sells rugs from house to house or nougat from a stand."

Avice frowned at his levity, and until they reached home she could talk of nothing but the pocketbook and its mysterious owner. As they parted at the foot of the steps Hastings caught her hand.

"You won't forget that we are going to the boat club reception tonight?" he begged. "Don't get so completely wrapped up in your magi that you forget me."

"I'll be ready," she assured him, with sudden penitence. "I will be ready at 8. Will that be time enough?"

"Just right," he agreed. "I'll be here on the moment."

He turned away and went off up the street. This was the first reception given by his boat club in its new house, and it was the event of the year to its members. For three months they had been preparing for it, and Hastings was all excitement.

He was at the house five minutes before 8 with a huge bouquet, but his face fell when Avice came into the room in the same cloth dress she had worn that afternoon.

"I didn't forget," she cried as she noted the disappointment in his face, "but I must go downtown first. I am in such terrible danger, Ned."

"What is the matter?" he cried in alarm, forgetting the reception for a moment. For answer she held out a paper.

"Let me read this," she commanded. "Listen: 'Esnah, son of Hamid, lost his pocketbook. If the finder does not return the same, Esnah, son of Hamid, will do even as did his father before him.'"

Hastings smiled.

"Where is the danger?" he demanded.

"He says," she went on, "'three days will be allowed,' and this is Saturday's paper. That means that unless he gets it tonight he will—oh! I don't know what he will do. That is what makes it so terrible."

"And you mean to say that he has frightened you into taking the pocketbook back tonight. Give it to me, and I will take it over in the morning. I'll take chances on the curse."

"But he says 'the finder,'" she persisted. "I'm the finder. We must go at once, Ned."

For a moment disappointment and impatience struggled with love. Then the saving sense of humor came to his relief, and he threw back his head and laughed.

"Get your things on," he said when his laughter died, "and we will hunt up this sorcerer of the pleasant promises. Perhaps we can get to the reception before it closes anyway."

They found the address with some difficulty. It was a curio shop in the foreign quarter, and through the jumble of rugs, Turkish slippers and hookahs in the window Esnah, the son of Hamid, could be seen puffing away at his cigarette.

He came forward politely as they entered, turning to Hastings for information as to his wants. Avice pressed eagerly forward.

"Are you Esnah, son of Hamid?" she demanded. "Are you the man who lost the purse?"

"I am he," said the Egyptian, with a flash of his white teeth beneath the black mustache.

Avice's face fell. She had anticipated a man wrapped in mystic robes sitting over a brazier on which bubbled a caldron. He was a very ordinary shopkeeper without even a fez to lend local color.

"There were in the purse $14 and some most important papers. It was of red leather, with a strap," he went on.

"This must be yours," she said as she passed over the purse.

"I am most obliged," said Esnah, sharply scrutinizing the couple. He could see that a money reward was not sought. "May I offer the lady a slight souvenir token of appreciation of her goodness?"

"Have you a lucky charm?" she asked, turning from the gay scarfs he was fingering.

Esnah smiled and went to the rear of the store, where the safe stood. It was not the first time a charm had been requested. He drew from a drawer an odd looking stone. It was one of many that came from Germany and cost $8 a gross, but Avice received it reverently and tucked it into her pocketbook with elaborate care.

Esnah stood politely in the attitude of one whose business is concluded and who waits only to be dismissed. But Avice was not through. She wandered about the store looking at the stock and making a few small purchases to justify her curiosity until at last she gained courage.

"Please," she said softly. Esnah was all attention.

"I want to know," she went on hurriedly, "what your father did to the thief who took his pocketbook and did not return it."

"My father was Hamid, son of Akkar," began the Egyptian. "To the merchants of Alexandria he was well known. One day in the market place he lost his wallet. For three days he told his loss, and then on the third day"—

"Yes?" Avice was almost leaning over the counter.

"On the third day," repeated Esnah, "he decided that he would have his pocketbook no more, so he went and bought another."

"Ned," said Avice softly as they came in sight of her home, "if you promise never to tell"—

"I won't rub it in," he promised.

"Then I'll marry you if you still want me. I guess I'm cured of superstition."

Seeing the Point.

The following story is told of a Philadelphia millionaire who has been dead some years: A young man came to him one day and asked pecuniary aid to start him in business.

"Do you drink?" asked the millionaire.

"Once in awhile."

"Stop it. Stop it for a year and then come and see me."

The young man broke off the habit at once and at the end of the year came to see the millionaire again.

"Do you smoke?" asked the successful man.

"Now and then."

"Stop it. Stop it for a year and then come and see me again."

The young man went home and broke away from this habit. It took him some time, but finally he worried through the year and presented himself again.

"Do you chew?" asked the philanthropist.

"Yes, I do"—now the desperate reply.

"Stop it. Stop it for a year and then come and see me again."

The young man stopped chewing, but he never went back again. When asked by his anxious friends why he never called on the millionaire again, he replied that he knew exactly what the man was driving at. "He'd have told me that now that I have stopped drinking and smoking and chewing I must have saved enough to start myself in business—and I have."

Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists, small free Trial Boxes of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing certainly, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of real, genuine merit. But that article must possess true merit, else the test will condemn, rather than advance it. Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing antiseptic balm, put up in beautiful nickel capped glass jars at 50c. Such soothing agents as Oil Eucalyptus, Thymol, Menthol, etc., are incorporated into a velvety, cream like Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Shoop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means also use internally, Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Stomach distress, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, biliousness, bad taste, etc. surely call for Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

Luck In Falling.

"It's a peculiar thing the tricks that luck will now and then play a chap," said a prominent physician recently. "Take, for instance, the breaking of bones in one's body. Did you ever stop and think how very many hard and high falls a man can have, light on rocky ground with half his body twisted under the other half, so to speak, and come off with not even a scratch? Then, again, a fellow will just trip over his own foot and, falling to the ground, break a leg or an arm. A good many will say it all depends on how one alights, but that seems to have absolutely nothing to do with it as I have seen a man alight in a certain way from a high fall and never injure himself, and then again have I seen a second chap alight in the same identical way and break a leg and an arm."—Columbus Dispatch.

Presence of Mind.

A captured Turkish officer on being led forth to execution asked for a glass of water before he died. On receiving it he looked uneasily around, as if afraid of assassination.

"Drink," said the commander. "No harm shall come to thee until thou hast drunk that water."

Instantly the commander's word was given the prisoner dashed the water on the sandy ground and thereby saved his life.

A Puzzle.

"Do you think you will learn to like your titled son-in-law?"

"I don't know," answered Mr. Cumrox. "I can't quite tell where to place him in my expense account. He is neither a recreation nor an investment."

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about two and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made out he Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which is an immense gold-bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Drastic Purgatives Destroy the Intestines

If you burn your hand you have a good example of the sort of inflammation that the Drastic Purgatives excite in the intestines. Yet many people consider the virtue of purgative pills depends upon their activity.

Dr. Hamilton was the first to produce a pill that would cleanse the system not by drastic action, but by exciting normal secretion of kidneys liver, and bowels.

The deepest recesses of the system are searched by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Poisonous and depressing accumulations whether stores in the lymphatics, kidneys, liver or bowels are driven out—inward cleanliness is effected.

You are sure to feel better, sure to experience the buoyancy of robust health that comes with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. No medicine is more gentle, more searching, or surer to give that buoyant feeling of sound health. For the family no remedy is so universally satisfactory as Dr Hamilton's Pills. 25 cents per box at all dealers.

Dog Poisoner at Work Again

It looks like the cowardly dog poisoner, who having a grudge against some particular canine who may have bothered him, is once more out with his strychnine, arsenic, or whatsoever poison he may use to kill the dog of his best friend or worst enemy. In any case the dog gets the poison and the coward who has thrown it out whether, immature child or dog gets it he cares not. Many valuable dogs, during the past year have been poisoned, and it is dollars to doughnuts that in 99 per cent. of these dog murders, that the wrong dog got the dose. Let us hope that the poisoner is a batchelor, as seems most likely, as, should his child take the dose this coward would crawl under a barn and die or else boast of his exploit.

FINDING MISS FILSON

By NORA BAYNE.

Copyrighted, 1907, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

"Find Miss Filson," directed the "old man," and Andy Brant, with a prompt and respectful "Yes, sir," tucked the letter into his pocket and finished adding the column of figures upon which he had been working.

Had Lowell & Lowell told him to go out and find the north pole Andy would have replied in precisely the same tone and would have started on the trip in precisely the same spirit. Nominally the assistant bookkeeper, Andy Brant was the general utility man. It was he who had given first aid to the injured water pipe with a piece of rubber overshoe and some adhesive tape from his bicycle kit and who had treated the office cat when it had fits.

But the present quest was not so promising. A correspondent had asked that his daughter be located. "We know that she was to have gone to the Y. W. C. A.," wrote the westerner. "No doubt it will be easy to locate her."

Andy grinned as he replaced the letter in his pocket and started for the association office.

The elderly woman in charge was willing to tell what little she knew when Andy showed his letter as authority. Miss Filson had come to them three months before, but had soon moved to an address far uptown. She smiled approvingly upon Andy as he thanked her. She liked this clean skinned, honest eyed young fellow, and she even unbent so far as to venture the hope that he would meet with success.

"I'M READING ELISABETH FILSON," SHE EXPLAINED.

Andy's answer was a grimace. Young women had a trick of losing themselves in New York. Miss Filson had left the association three months before. It was not likely that she could endure life in one cheap boarding house for that length of time. Most places were endurable for less than a month.

His suspicions were verified when he reached the uptown address. Miss Filson was dimly remembered by the rosy cheeked servant girl who answered the door. She stayed only two weeks and departed on an express wagon, explaining that she could not trust the driver with the trunk. It was this incident and the fact that she did not leave her new address that fixed her more clearly in the girl's mind than most of those who came and went.

Andy interviewed express wagon drivers in an increasing circle for the remainder of the morning and wound up so conveniently near his own boarding place that he stopped in for lunch.

Mrs. Lennon's establishment was different from the average New York boarding house. Andy had lived there for a year and still liked it. Now that golden haired Bess Saunders had taken up her residence there he was willing to remain indefinitely. Andy was not susceptible, but the first time Bess had come into the stuffy dining room he had fallen to love, so deeply in love that when she had lost her position as stenographer and could not pay her board bills, unknown to Bess, he had arranged with Mrs. Lennon that he would be responsible for the bills until Bess found a new place, when the landlady should reimburse him.

"Any luck?" he asked as he slipped into his seat opposite the girl. She shook her head.

"Well, I have some good news for you," he went on. "Our typewriter is to be married week after next. She's going to quit the job, and the 'old man' says you may have it."

Bess clapped her hands delightedly, and Andy beamed upon her.

"Let's celebrate," he suggested. "I've got an order that I can't fill. Let's go to the matinee, will you? Might as well do that as tramp around town for nothing."

Bess nodded, and Andy sat on the front steps smoking a cigarette and building air castles while the girl dressed. They had only cheap seats in the rear of the balcony, but it was a treat, and occasionally Andy could feel the slight pressure of the girl's arm against his own, emphasizing her nearness. He did not think much of the vaudeville performance. What mattered the accomplishments of the trained seals and the toe dancer when he could lean back with closed eyes and conjure up visions of light housekeeping with [illegible]. He was roused from [illegible] two. After [illegible] place with Lowell & Lowell.

"Isn't that great?" asked Bess. Andy roused himself with a start to observe the accomplishments of a pair of acrobats.

"Sure thing," he assented. "I was thinking of something bigger and greater."

"What's that?" she demanded.

"I was thinking," he explained, "that perhaps you wouldn't need Miss Austin's place in the office. What's the matter with our getting married and you could get a bit of a flat and live—not board."

Andy's voice made the distinction eloquent, and the girl's gray eyes grew.

"But you don't know anything about me," she protested wistfully.

"I know you're the girl I want to marry," he insisted stoutly. "Mrs. Lennon's known me for a year, and the 'old man's' had me working for him for three years. You can write to Brewsterville and find out the rest about me if you want to. I'm not from Missouri where you're concerned."

There was a sudden darkness as the lights went out for the motion pictures, and in the gloom a tiny hand sought his and was quickly captured.

"Is it yes?" he asked, his breath coming in sharp aspirations.

"I can't write back home," she said softly. "But if you will take me as I am, Andy, it's yes."

"There's nothing wrong," he declared stoutly, "but if you were a shoplifter I'd marry you just the same." The audience was filing out before the last pictures were thrown on the screen, but he leaned over and kissed her.

"We're engaged," he declared, "but you'll have to wait until Saturday for the ring."

The lights flashed on again, and unwillingly enough Andy gathered up their belongings and prepared to join the departing crowd. The boarding place was but a short distance away, and they decided upon walking. Andy's feet touched the sidewalk, but he felt as though he were in the clouds that dotted the evening sky.

"I don't want you to think I've done anything wrong," whispered Bess. "It isn't that, dear. It's just that I have no family and don't want ever to be reminded of them. My father married a second time, my stepmother and I did not get along well, and I"—

"Lit out," he said. "I don't blame you. Lots of girls won't put up with a secondhand mother. I'm looking for one this very minute—that is, I'm supposed to be," he added.

"That was what took you out of the office this afternoon?"

"Yes. You see, her father buys goods from us, and he wrote Lowell & Lowell to look the girl up and tell her that her dear mother had decided to be good and begged the girl to come home. It's too far for him to come and look for her in the busy season, but we're to find her and ship her back to Elton, O."

"Elton?" she echoed. "Andy, is his name Filson?"

"Sure thing. Do you know her?"

"I'm Frances Elisabeth Filson," she explained. "Saunders was my own mother's name."

"That let's me out," sighed Andy. "Why, your father has seven different kinds of money."

"But I am richer, for I have you," she whispered.

"Do you mean it? You still want to marry me now you've won your father back?"

"You know I do," she said reproachfully.

"And to think," mused Andy, "that I was cussing the old man for chasing me out on such a fool job."

Bess laughed. She knew what Andy meant.

"The Blood is The Life."

Science has never gone beyond the above simple statement of scripture. But it has illuminated that statement and given it a meaning ever broadening with the increasing breadth of knowledge. When the blood is "bad" or impure it is not alone the body which suffers through disease. The brain is also clouded, the mind and judgement are effected, and many an evil deed or impure thought may be directly traced to the impurity of the blood. Foul, impure blood can be made pure by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It enriches and purifies the blood thereby curing, pimples, blotches, eruptions and other cutaneous affections, as eczema, tetter, or salt-rheum, hives and other manifestations of impure blood.

● ● ● ● ● ●

In the cure of scrofulous swellings, enlarged glands, open eating ulcers, or old sores, the "Golden Medical Discovery" has performed the most marvelous cures. In cases of old sores, or open eating ulcers, it is well to apply to the open sores Dr. Pierce's All-Healing Salve, which possesses wonderful healing potency when used as an application to the sores in conjunction with the use of "Golden Medical Discovery" as a blood cleansing constitutional treatment. If your druggist don't happen to have the "All-Healing Salve" in stock, you can easily procure it by inclosing fifty-four cents in postage stamps to Dr. R. V. Pierce, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post. Most druggists keep it as well as the "Golden Medical Discovery."

● ● ● ● ● ●

You can't afford to accept any medicine of unknown composition as a substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, having a complete list of ingredients in plain English on its bottle-wrapper, the same being attested as correct under oath.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

The Oshawa Walker Lost 25 Minutes Going to Port Hope

Port Hope, Sept. 24.—William S Scattergood, of Oshawa, who this morning started to carry out a wager to walk from Oshawa to Port Hope, thence to Toronto, and return to Oshawa, a distance of 138 miles, in 36 hours, reached here at five minutes after ten, having travelled at the rate of four miles an hour.

He registered at the Queen's Hotel, and was given a rub by his trainer, P. Fenn. He left Oshawa at two o'clock this morning. He was half an hour behind his scheduled time reaching Port Hope, having been considerably delayed by heavy rainstorms. He feels confident, however, of accomplishing the undertaking, but the majority of sportsmen here think his chances are slight. He appears to be in a nervous mood, and seems to lack the perseverance necessary for such a walk. He is not properly attired for the journey. He is wearing his ordinary clothing, long trousers, heavy tweed coat and cap, and an ordinary pair of boots, but these he just donned before entering Port Hope.

Scattergood's time from Oshawa to Port Hope was eight hours and five minutes, while Reynolds made the same journey in seven hours and 40 minutes.

C. P. R. To Build 22 Knot Boats and will Break Ocean Records

London, Sept. 25---Mr. Baker, the European Manager of the C.P.R., interviewed by the Westminister Gazette, said the shareholders, at the meeting in Montreal on October 2nd, would be asked to Sanction the building of two twenty-two knot liners for the Atlantic service, so as to make the passage from Liverpool to Quebec in five days. The C.P.R. intends to cut the time from London to Brisbane down to 24 days.

A vessel of the speed named would traverse the 2,485 miles between Halifax and Liverpool in 4 days and 8 hours, or give to Canada the shortest and fastest service across the Atlantic, fully 16 hours better than the New York route, even with the Lusitania breaking records.

Harry Kelley Killed on the Railroad near Hastings

Birdsalls, Sept. 25.—While one foot over the rail of the Grand Trunk track and his head lying towards the ditch at the side, Harry Kelly, a recent arrival from Scotland, was this morning found dead a quarter of a mile east of this station. Kelly was working as a section man on the G.T.R only for the past month, under the foremanship of Mr. Robt. N. Ridpath, who was the first yesterday morning to see the dead man stretched across the track.

From all appearances the unfortunate man who was just 33 years of age, was struck by train No. 11 which arrive in Peterborough each evening at 8.30 o'clock.

Kelly, accompanied by another sectionman named Wm. Thompson, who resides one mile east of here, walked to Hastings Monday night a distance of about six miles, and on the return trip he is supposed to have been struck by the train. Thompson states that he could not get Kelly to come back with him and he later probably began the walk some time after.

DID NOT RETURN.

Monday night he did not return to Geo. Potter's residence, where he boarded, but not until yesterday morning was it known that he lay dead on the tracks, when found by the section foreman.

Mr. Ridpath noticed that the wheel of the engine had passed over him and injured one foot. He must also have been struck with it, as his skull was fractured when found. Kelly has only been out here about a month.

Yesterday afternoon Coroner Gray arrived and empanelled a jury and an inquest will be held at Westwood town hall on Monday at 2 o'clock.

STRANGLED CHILDREN

Then Calmly told Her Husband to Come Home and See What She Had Done

Used Rope to Strangle Them

Buffalo, Sept. 25.—Mrs. Bertha Mund, aged 37, killed her three children this morning.

They were all sleeping when thir mother destroyed them by strangling thm with a ropee.

She murdered the boy, Christopher, first. He was asleep on a mattress in the parlor. She wrapped a blanket about the boy's head, covered his face, and then tied a clothes line about his neck, turning it around three times and then drew it tight and fastened it by tying several knots.

The police say the boy could not have lived more than a few minutes. When found his body was half on the mattress and half on the floor, with the face downward.

ASLEEP IN A CRIB.

The girl, Helen, was the next victim. This child was asleep in a crib in the parlor. Mrs. Mund wound a clothes line around the little one's neck twice and after strangling the child she carried the body into the bedroom and put it on the bed and covered it with a quilt.

Freda, the baby, was her next victim. She was asleep in a baby carriage in the kitchen. Mrs. Mund tied a piece of clothes line about the little one's neck once and fastened it in two knots.

"COME HOME AND SEE."

When Mrs. Mund met her husband she said; "Fred, I have made away with the three children; come home and see."

Mund hurried home, taking his wife with him. When they reached the house Mrs. Mund sat down at a table and began to cry. Mund notified the police, and the woman was taken into custody. To Superintendent of Police Regan, Mrs. Mund made a statement, in which she said;

"I killed the children because I did not want them to grow up and be crazy like me."

The police say the woman does not realize the enormity of her crime, and that she killed the children while suffering with an attack of insanity that suddenly seized her. She had been ill with nervous trouble for about six months, but had never, prior to yesterday morning, manifested signs of mental derangement.

Buffalo, Sept. 25. — Mrs. Bertha Mund, aged 37, killed her three children yesterday morning.

They were all sleeping when their mother destroyed them by strangling them with a rope.

First Known Appointee as Local Letter Carrier

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Dunstan, deputy superintendent of the outside services of the post office department, had his work cut out to decide which of the many applicants for the job of letter carriers for this city should obtain the situations. A reporter of The Times waited round the post office until really indecent hours of night without success in full. However last night, at a late hour, our reporter learned that Mr. Chas. Mitchell, late of the Snowden House staff, and formerly of the English army, abroad, in India, Egypt and other countries, was one of the successful applicants. The names of the other successful applicants will appear in tomorrow's issue.

Two Great Salvation Army Colleges to Educate Workers

St. John, N.B., Sept. 24.—In an address last night before the Canadian Club, General Booth, after speaking at length of the work and plans of Salvation Army said that he hoped to live until he could see perfected a scheme which he had long had in his head, that is, the establishment of two great Salvation Army Colleges —one in England and the other in Canada.

"I have long dreamed of this thing,' said General Booth, "and may now say that the dream is soon to be realized.'

General Booth went on to explain that affiliated with these colleges will be smaller institutions all over the world. Their aim will be to educate men and women to the Army's work.

Barnardo Home Latest Arrivals

The English colony in Peterbor- has been augumented by some 95 girls arrived at Hazel Brae, from England. They came over on the S. S. Dominion. The girls landed in Quebec on Sunday evening, and reached here at eleven o'clock Monday night. On the same boat were 132 boys bound for the Barnardo Home in Toronto. The party was in charge of Mr. Owen, superintendent of Barnardo Homes in Canada.

Four parties of girls have arrived at Hazel Brae this season, numbering about three hundred in all.

Miss Harris, who for seven years was assistant secretary at Hazel Brae, and left last month for the Old Country, has returned to resume her former position here.

Church Not at Present on a Rock

Yesterday a local citizen who had both eyes open on certain operations connected with the moving of a building gave it out as his opinion that, as he said at the Young People's meeting in the Park street Baptist church, that there is danger of the building collapsing. As is generally known this structure is being removed from its present site across Park street to make room for the erection of the new church, the tenders for which will likely be awarded this week. On Monday night the edifice was almost in a state of collapse. The doors and windows were out of plumb and in the wind, the frame building swayed considerably.

A large health publication tells its readers of a number of simple and safe prescriptions that can be made at home. The following, however, for the cure of rheumatism and kidney and bladder troubles receives the greatest praise, viz., Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce, Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. These simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at any good prescription pharmacy at little cost and are mixed by shaking well in a bottle.

The dose for adults is a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime, drinking a full tumberful of water after each dose. It is further stated that this prescription is a positive remedy for kidney trouble and lame back, weak bladder and urinary difficulties, especially of the elderly people and one of the best things to be used in rheumatic afflictions, relieving the aches and pains and reducing swellings in just a short while.

A well-known local druggist states that this mixture acts directly upon the eliminative tissues of the kidneys, cleanses these spongelike organs and gives them power to sift and strain the poisonous waste matter and uric acid from the blood which is the cause of rheumatism.

Cut this out and hand to some sufferer which certainly would be an act of humanity.

A New Serial Begins on Thursday

The Times for years past has made a speciality of presenting to our readers the best and most thoroughly criticized stories from the pens of our leading contemporary authors. Now that the present novel about reaching its denouement is about to show where they married and lived happily ever afterwards, or whether the villian got in his foul work we are just now unprepared to say, not having followed the story in its entirety, we are able to note that in the issue of Thursday will appear the first part of that strong and dramatic novel by Mrs Mary J. Holmes, entitled "Alexander." Mrs. Holmes' novels are almost too well known to require mention as those who have followed her works are acquainted with Nora Deane, The English Orphans, Lena Rivers, etc. Our readers can, however, rely on the Times giving them the latest and most popular fiction on the page devoted to such matter.

Had a Good Season

Splendid Record of the Trent Valley Navigation Company

The Trent Valley Navigation Company which has concluded its summer season for passenger service, has every reason for congratulation over the successful summer's work it has accomplished. Today the last regular boat of this company will keep its obligations. It might here be mentioned that the Trent Valley Navigation Company have not only kept their obligations with the public but have been the means of, not only local people, but those from a distance, enjoying to their fullest capacity, the summer months among our Kawartha Lakes. It is to the credit of this company that, while carrying thousands upon thousands of passengers during the summer months from the sun-baked brick and mortar realms of city environments to the ozone laden and lush and game populated outlying and God's fresh air surrounded beautiful places for tired city folks to enjoy, nor, to continue, has a life been lost, or a man or woman crippled. The T.V.N. Co. has a record that is enviable among the many companies catering to the summer outing trade.

OF INTERBST TO INVESTORS

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP," which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use, millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs, neither boosting nor boasting, for if we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present advice is becoming easier almost immediately wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

Address your enquiries to;

Pickpockets at Lindsay Fair--will Likely Operate in Peterboro

Lindsay Post says;

That pickpockets were in Lindsay during the fair last week is particularly evident to many who have had wads of the long green cleverly taken out of their pockets in crowds. Not a few are now wishing they had left their money at home.

Mr. Thomas Puley, of Woodville, was relieved of twenty-five greenbacks at the G.T.R. station on Saturday night. The money was taken from his trousers pocket as he got on the 6.23 train for his home. He was in town this morning, and informed Chief Vincent of his loss.

Miss Hill, of Toronto, lost a gold watch which Mr. George Bell found and promptly restored to her through the medium of the Post. Miss Hill was delighted to recover the timepiece.

A gentleman got a couple of tickets on Saturday for the grandstand. He put the change of ten dollars in his pocket, and when he sat down it was gone. Someone had transplanted it.

Mr. S. Oliver found a purse at his stand which he advertised in the Found column of the Post. Mr. Dave Logan, a farmer near Bobcaygeon, was robbed of $9 by pickpockets.

Otonabee Farmer Has Passed Away

Death of Mr. Frank Sisson of the 10th Concession

On Monday night there passed away in the person of Mr Frank Sisson, one of the best known young men of the township of Otonabee.

The deceased who was 21 years of age, was a son of the late Mr. Thos Sisson who died last spring. Mr. Sisson leaves to mourn his loss his brother who is employed at the Canadian General Electric Works, his brother Walter at home and a sister Mrs. Geo Stewart. The funeral will take place on Thursday to the English church cemetery in Lavan. The late Mr. Frank Sisson was a member of the English Church and a Reformer in politics.

A Sad Scene Yesterday

Yesterday afternoon at about three o'clock a sad scene was in evidence in front of a local hotel. When a young man, who should know better was seen homeward to get home by two lady friends. The young man whose name, for his parents' sake, we omit, rhymes with the very stuff that led to his downfall, viz., booze, had acquired a 7x9 jag that had got beyond his control. He simply lay down on the pavement when his lady friends tried to get him home and used language that was strictly unparliamentary. It is now up to every dispenser of liquid refreshment to deny all requests of this young man for alcoholic stimulants. Should the same man ever be served to such an excess as to cause anything like the scene of yesterday afternoon The Times will have no hesitation in publishing the name or names of such places as sell him liquor. Whilst having no "grouch" against any boniface, The Times desires to see that those incapable of looking after their own interests should be protected. This article is not thrown out in a broad cast threat to all licensed victuallers, but there is reason in all things and, should a repition of yesterday's scene be enacted in public again, we will give full particulars.

Wedding at St. Peter's Cathedral

Mr. H. Gainey and Miss Clara Schultz Married Yesterday Morning

Yesterday morning in St. Peter's Cathedral a pretty wedding ceremony was celebrated when Mr. Harry Gainey entered the great army of benedicts. His charming bride was Miss Clara, daughter of Mrs. Andrew Schultz, Water street.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Galvin in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Tilly Schultz, and the groom was supported by Mr. Timothy Dineen. The bride wore a pretty travelling suit of brown with hat to match. After the ceremony a dainty dejeuner was partaken of at the home of the bride after which Mr. and Mrs. Gainey left on the 7.20 G.T.R. train on a trip to Toronto, Scarboro, Guelph and other points west. They will return to Peterborough at the end of the week.

News Briefs

New York, Sept. 25—From taking an overdose of medicine containing several poisonous ingredients, which he had himself prepared for a malady from which he had suffered for many years, Dr. Peter M Wise, 56 years old, died here yesterday. The coroner's physician decided that death was purely accidental.

For many years Dr. Wise suffered from locomotor ataxia. He had tried numerous remedies without obtaining relief, and about a year ago, prepared a prescription for himself. This he had since been taking, and early yesterday took an overdose.

London, Sept. 24.—The Globe says about the Alaska boundary at Atlin, Yukon, that it may be due to the machinations of the notorious Western Miners' Federation, whose influence is unhappily far too strong in Dominion mining districts.

The Pall Mall Gazette says the situation is too critical for procrastination. It would take a very short time indeed for British Columbia to be submerged by Asiatics if immigration continued to increase at the rate of the past summer. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's letter on the crisis is a trifle too diplomatic in tone to have a soothing effect on Western feeling, and suggests, indeed, that Ottawa is still only rubbing its eyes over the incidents of the last few weeks.

30,000 in The Province

Vancouver, Sept. 25. — A petition numerously signed by residents of the province and endorsed by miners' union will be forwarded to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, pointing out that there are 30,000 Orientals in the province, that the existence of Canada is threatened by the influx of non-assimilable races, and praying that, regardless of foreign countries and all sentimental and political considerations, the government immediately pass such legislation as may be requisite to insure the absolute exclusion of Orientals from the Dominion of Canada."

There was a meeting of the league last night. Mr. Macpherson spoke. Mr. Wilton, the Australian immigration expert, explained Australia's methods of exclusion. The league now numbers over two thousand paid members, including three Vancouver members of the local legislature.

Pretty Wedding Celebrated Yesterday

Miss Jessie Bell United to Mr. C. S. St. John

A happy and interesting event was celebrated yesterday morning at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Switzer, 10 Weller street, when Miss Jessie Bell, daughter of Mr. Adam Bell of Asquith, Lord, was united in marriage to Mr. Samuel C. St. John of Sunderland. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. J. Keith, pastor of Knox church in the presence of immediate friends and relatives. The bride was becomingly attired in a travelling suit of brown broadcloth. After the sumptuous wedding breakfast, was partaken of. The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome gold locket and chain.

Mr. and Mrs. St John left on the 4.48 C.P.R. train, for Toronto, Niagara Falls and points west, and on their return will reside in Sunderland.

Tomato Catsup had Begun to Work

Yesterday a local grocer traveller happened in the course of business to call into an east ward grocery shop. As the commercial man, as per usual, was trying to sell a bill of goods, and incidentally was praising up his own particular line of samples, he remarked to the proprietor, "Now how are you off for tomatoe catsup? I have something here that beats them all. It's away up."

The grocer, with due caution said he would like to sample the sample before buying. "Why certainly," replied the traveler. "I'll pull the cork and let you taste the goods." He pulled the cork and —— there —— she stopped. The stuff had "worked." That commercial man, as the cork came out was like the iron structural part of a flowing fountain. There was a geyser of tomato catsup that ascended to the ceiling and the traveller was a recipient of the drops of red hued condiment that scattered themselves all over the floor and counters. The traveler made use of several words that rhymed with him.

Peace Confab a Failure

London, Sept. 25—To call be international peace conference at The Hague a fiasco would be merely to repeat the public opinion of Europe.

Its meetings long since have ceased to command attention, and the newspapers are giving them less and less space. Socially, the conference had been a great success. It has given The Hague a summer of gaiety unusual in that staid little capital by a constant series of dinners and receptions.

The greatest disappointment to the delegates is the failure of the conference to have established a permanent court of arbitration. Which appeared to be the nearest of realization of any of the practical projects put forward. The results attained give little satisfaction in England. Even those persons who, at the commencement of the conference, had the view that a mere discussion of the problems for which it was called to consider would be a step toward the prevention of wars, admit their hopes were unjustified, and they now are among the first to condemn the entire proceedings, describing them as a waste of time.

Written offers for 583 Water St., addressed to P.O. Box 201, Peterborough, will be received by Mr. J. H. Burnham, up to Saturday next, 28th instant. The house will be open for inspection during the interval.

Has Returned to Peterboro

Mr. Joe Welch, a former Peterborough gentleman, who has for the past five years been the manager of one of the most up-to-date and largest confectionery stores of Paterson & Co., Yonge street, Toronto, has returned to the city, and will cater to the wants of the Peterborough citizens. He will be in charge of the upper store of Long & Hoggers, on George street.

COMING OF THE JAPANESE.

The Government Preparing to Act in the Matter.

The Canadian Government has been inquiring into the reports from British Columbia as to the large influx of Japanese. The representatives of the Japanese Government state that the agreement made with the Canadian Government a few years ago as to restriction is being rigidly observed. Before leaving their own country the Japanese must procure passports from their Government, and the Japanese Government agreed that not more than one passport per month for each district would be issued to its citizens who desired to come to Canada. As there are about forty districts this would permit about 500 a year to come to Canada direct from Japan. This number has never been reached, and the agreement is still in force. The Japanese, however, arriving in British Columbia are from Honolulu, American territory, and over them the Japanese consuls have no official authority. They can do a great deal, however, in dissuading their people from leaving the Hawaiian Islands, and this will be done. Many of those who have arrived have gone to the United States and some of those now on the way are destined for the Great Northern. The Canadian Government is hopeful that with the co-operation of the Japanese Government they can limit this immigration to such an extent that no ill results will follow to the western provinces.

The Tomb of Walter Scott.

In Dryburgh abbey, standing among the ruins of the ancient choir, with the afternoon sun shining upon it, we saw the tomb of Walter Scott in St. Mary's aisle. A noble block of Aberdeen granite marks the last resting place of Sir Walter and Lady Scott. The simple inscription records the dates of birth and death of the husband and wife. Here also are the mortal remains of the novelist's children and of his son-in-law and biographer, John Gibson Lockhart, of whom Scott wrote affectionately, "Lockhart is Lockhart, to whom I can most willingly confide the happiness of the daughter who chose him and whom he has chosen."

As we turned from the grave of Walter Scott and wandered across the now roofless and grass grown refectory we recalled his last connected words to Lockhart: "My dear, be a good man—be virtuous—be religious—be a good man; nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here."—Book News.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS ANNA BOBERG.

Woman Artist Who Lives Alone in the Arctic Regions.

Miss Anna Boberg, the celebrated Swedish artist and sister of the equally famous architect of the same name, has a studio on the lonely isle of Furoen, in the Arctic ocean. The only other inhabitant of this desolate place is the lighthouse keeper. Miss Boberg is excelled by no other artist in the painting of northern scenery, and so earnest an enthusiast is she that when her fingers become too cold to hold a brush it is strapped on her hand. Her pictures created a furore in Paris, where they were exhibited last winter. Clad in reindeer skins, she takes trips still farther than her home into the arctics, climbing slippery heights and transferring what she sees to canvas. On these trips her food is codfish, sea gulls' eggs and coffee and her sleeping place the abandoned hut of some native fisherman who has been driven south by the cold.

A Popcorn Party For Children.

A correspondent in Mother's Magazine tells of a popcorn party recently given for children and described it so delightfully that it seems almost a crime that every little boy and girl cannot enjoy the pleasure of such a good time.

"A kitchen party," it said in the notes of invitation, and "bring an apron with you."

The kitchen was large and roomy and was decorated, in keeping with the festive occasion, with colored tissue paper ornaments and festoons of popcorn. Strings of colored popcorn festooned the chandelier over the dining room table, and the candlelights had pink crepe paper shades ornamented with strings of popcorn, all of the same length, that hung down from the top of the shade all around two inches below, as a fringe of beads or crystals would do.

Pretty little souvenirs and decorations on the table were made of popcorn that the hostess had prepared as small baskets, with ribbon wound wire handles, decorated with a ribbon bow or autumn leaf, and little ship stood as a centerpiece on a glass mirror, with a shore of popcorn. The boat shape, made of stiff paper, was entirely covered with white popcorn. It had white sails, and the mainmast was also coated with kernels of the popped corn. The boat was filled with a cargo of nuts and the little baskets with bonbons.

Jolly souvenirs for each place had been made of orange skins, the skins being divided halfway in four sections, when the pulp was neatly removed whole. Fluffy popcorn was dropped in, then the sections pressed together with sugar sirup. A crown of popcorn adorned the top. Circles were cut out and popped corn set in for eyes, having the smoothest part turned out, with a dab of black paint for the pupil of the eyes, another for the nose, and the slit for the grinning mouth was filled in with gleaming teeth. A double frill of yellow and black tissue paper was glued in place under each.

The little guests came in time to help prepare some of the supper refreshments in the popcorn line. The boys were given the hardest part of the work—shelling the corn—while the girls, two at a time, could pop the corn on the ample space the range afforded. As fast as this was ready the hostess prepared it in an appetizing form, as molasses popcorn balls, assorted popcorn bars and popcorn potatoes. As these are a decided novelty for children, the process of their making should be explained. Beat up the white of an egg stiffly with a tablespoon of cold water and the same quantity of powdered sugar. Mix with the popcorn and molasses and roll into a ball.

Living In Flats.

Although the sanitary arrangements are always described as being "up to date," it is just as well to find out what date is referred to.

Are you surprised that all your windows are overlooked by neighbors? That's nothing! Heaps of little things have been overlooked by the landlord himself.

Take the "best bedroom." Of course no doubt it is the best of the three. "Best" is, after all, only a relative term.

We doubt, however, whether this is the expression you will make use of if you ever come to sleep in it. If you should, please remember that the neighbors can hear every word.

The "dining room" (excuse a smile) has this advantage—by standing in the middle of the room you can put all the pictures straight without moving.

The "drawing room" is no doubt so called because it has a beautiful north light which, we believe, artists find indispensable.

And just look at the tiles in the fireplace. No, you are quite right to restrain your feelings.

They are Liver Pills

Ayer's Pills are liver pills. They act directly on the liver, make more bile secreted. This is why they cure constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, sick-headache. Ask your doctor if he knows a better laxative pill. We certainly do not. If he does, then use his kind.

We have no secrets! We publish the formulas of all our preparations. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

The "hall," you will observe, is one of those long, thin halls so fashionable in Flatland. We ourselves should have called it a passage.

It is lighted by a "borrowed light," which might just as well be returned to the person who lent it for all the good it is doing.

Ah, the "bathroom!" Very small, you say? Wait a bit. Shut the door. So. Now, you see, there is plenty of room to get into the bath, if you don't have a chair or a towel in the room.

The "kitchen" is nice. See how thoughtfully they have put the window opposite the range so that the cook shall not have the glare in her eyes when she is stirring the soup!

What's that you say? You have found a positively delightful coal cupboard which makes up for everything, as so few flats have any accommodation for coal.

One minute, please! Do you really think that it is a coal cupboard?

Look! What are those three pegs for?

Do people put pegs in coal cupboards?

Must we tell you what it is? Very well then. That, madam, we beg most humbly to inform you, that is the "servant's bedroom!"

Shame.

"My father's house is full of fakirs," said a twelve-year-old playing in a neighbor's house. When asked what he meant, he recited one article after another, all cheap imitations of expensive things.

A little girl who had turned fourteen said to a friend: "Mamma says I must not pretend; that to pretend is to lie. But she pretends as much as I do. She pretends that she has a stained glass window in her bathroom when it's really only colored paper pasted on the glass. Of course mamma's a woman, and I'm not. I suppose I'll have to wait until I grow up before I can pretend."

When the remarks of these two youngsters were repeated to the parents, they were amazed that the points had fastened themselves on their children's minds. But it is here nevertheless that the pernicious habit of allowing shams and imitations in thousands of our American homes is creating its worst havoc—upon the children at the most formative periods of their lives, says the Ladies' Home Journal. And yet we expect a child to ring true in his thoughts and character when on every hand he is surrounded in his parents' home with things that are shams and imitations.

Cupid as Chauffeur.

At a bridesmaids' luncheon recently, across the center of the table was a miniature road paved with rice and outlined by clusters of pink roses, the stems supporting them tied with pink ribbons. At the end of the road was a miniature (toy) automobile with Cupid as chauffeur with big rose colored goggles on. Strapped on the auto was a tiny trunk tied with white ribbon and a toy suit case with foreign labels. This clever decoration caused much fun among the bridesmaids and the bride elect. The favors were little imitation Dresden pianos, the bride elect being a pianist.

Do You Want to Be Pretty?

Don't be afraid of water. Drink plenty of it, and take as many baths as you can. Learn a few physical culture exercises, and practice them night and morning. This may all sound rather uninteresting to you, but if you follow these few suggestions you will be healthier, happier and better looking.

The Window Gardener.

Vessels of water kept standing among your plants will prove beneficial in supplying moisture. They can easily be hidden behind the foliage so that they will not appear unsightly.

Don't forget to turn your window plants around at least twice a week so that all sides will get the sunlight.

To Remove Finger Marks.

Finger marks on painted doors may be removed by rubbing with a perfectly clean cloth dipped in a little paraffin. The place should be afterward washed over with a cloth wrung out of hot water and finally polished with a dry duster.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 70 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. -- PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont.,
are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

The Tale of a Feather Duster.

By F. P. SUMMERWELL.

Copyrighted, 1907, by M. M. Cunningham.

His first election night in New York found him drifting and lonely, in the midst of the howling mob that surged around Herald square.

The horns, the tickling dusters, the showers of confetti, the merry intermingling of class and mass, were all too new to be quite pleasing experiences. He felt interested enough, however, to move with the throng and to take good naturedly the many familiarities of the people near him.

At Thirty-seventh street and Broadway he saw a slim young girl trying to escape the attentions of two overzealous duster holders. He pushed his way to her side and the boys fled, leaving him alone with the lady, no longer in distress.

She was young and of an alluring, limpid prettiness that made him feel big and awkward and anxious about the set of his coat. So absorbed was he in her general charm that her suddenly thrusting of a duster under his nose was a distinct shock. He had just sense enough to snatch it and ask, "Who are you?" when she ran away. Over her shoulder she called, "I'll tell you when you give me back my duster." Then she was gone.

He moved with the capering merrymakers up to Longacre square, where he learned of the defeat of his candidate for governor, then went home. The duster he carried with him and, handling it tenderly, hoped it might prove a means to dispel the crushing loneliness which he had felt ever since he had left his native town. He often wondered what the letters M. M. on the handle stood for.

His days went about as usual. He paid his lost election bet to the other young lawyer at the office. The winner's not treating seemed strange. At home they always did—but in New York everything was so different. He began to get on at the office, and once Judge Metcalf, his chief, mentioned taking him home to dine, but the matter never went any further.

The night of the presidential election found him once more mingling in the swarming pandemonium that raged around Herald square. He had the duster inside his coat and was no longer either lonely or listless, for he was hunting for M. M. to give her back the duster.

He wandered up and down, reading the conflicting bulletins, but always looking for a slender fairy of a girl who had sat like a queen in his heart for two years. The great searchlight at the Times building swung due north to indicate a Republican landslide, while the Journal's bulletin announced an overwhelming victory for the Democrats. Farther downtown the Herald proclaimed a small but safe majority for the Republicans, while according to a white sheet at Thirty-first street the same thing had befallen the other party.

He wrenched a yard long horn from an impertinent Italian boy, was tickled by a lady in an ermine coat and received a shower of confetti from a German housewife—all in the space of about ten minutes. He no longer looked askance at the mixed merrymakers. It was New York, and it all "went."

In front of the New Grand his attention was attracted by a gorgeous motor car. On the front seat sat his lady of the feather duster. There could be no doubt. It was she.

He felt cold and scared, but he pulled himself together and, stepping to her side, gave her the duster, handle first, and said, "Now, will you tell me who you are?"

She opened her eyes very wide, recognized him and the duster and started to speak when a smashing blow from the man beside her sent him spinning to fall with his head against an iron grating. His next sensation was of flying through space. Then a thousand bells rang, lights danced, voices buzzed, and he opened his eyes on a strange room. It was handsomer than his own, and beside him sat a nurse looking out of the window.

There was a calendar on the table, giving the date as Nov. 16. It must be a mistake, he thought—this was Nov. 7, election night, and yet there was the calendar. He put out his hand to draw it to him when the nurse turned, and he recognized the girl in the automobile. His head ached and his hands shook, but he was good grit, and when he met her bright gaze he said, "You never did tell me who you are." She laughed squarely at him, saying:

"My brother seemed to think his answer quite sufficient. He knocked you over before I had a chance to say anything. You ought to know who I am anyway. My picture has been on father's desk ever since the day after I met you in Thirty-seventh street, and the boys told me who you were. It occurred to me then that he ought to have one, but you never saw it. I am Marjory Metcalf, your chief's only daughter.

"Tom didn't know you when you brought me my duster, and before I could speak he knocked you down. We brought you home and have had a terrible time saving your life. The nurse is asleep, and I stole into her uniform. I guess I'll have to go now or she might not like it."

He caught her dimpled hand and persuaded her that the nurse really needed rest, which she must perforce take so long as she was without any uniform.

They had a lovely afternoon, giggling over the imprisoned nurse, eating bonbons, forgetting his medicine and being as happy as one can be in the springtime of life.

At 5 Mrs. Metcalf came in and told them that the nurse had departed in high dudgeon. They did not get any one in her place, Marjory and Tom and Mrs. Metcalf taking care of him themselves.

The night before he was to leave Marjory came up with the maid who brought his dinner. She was so perfectly lovely in a clinging white dress, open at the neck, that he had no eyes for anything except her dainty beauty. She finally decided that if he would not eat she would feed him, and they made a great frolic of the meal.

After she had made him take the last morsel, she decided to make him presentable. So she washed his face, then she combed his hair, and then he but you would have done it yourself she was so sweet. Of course she cried they always do and he had to kiss her again to comfort her. Then she grew a little saucy and tipped up her cleft chin and looked so irresistible he simply had to just once more.

Mrs. Metcalf came in and found her daughter kneeling by Phil Pemberton's chair with her head on his shoulder. Her mother was so overcome that she forgot her grammar and exclaimed, "Why, Marjory, you've been being kissed."

"Mother," said Marjory, "how can you speak of such things before a strange man?"

"He is acting like a stranger, isn't he?" sniffed the lady of the house. "Are you engaged?"

"You'll have to ask him," said Marjory. "I don't really know."

"Why, yes, Mrs. Metcalf," answered Phil, "we are—I am sorry Marjory never told you."

"Why, Phil," exclaimed his sweet heart, "you know we have never mentioned it."

"Mother," she cried, "don't you think father must be lonely downstairs alone? I should think you'd hate to leave him."

Mrs. Metcalf went and told her husband, who said he was delighted—that he would rather have her marry a poor man who promised well than a rich one who did not. Phil stayed a week longer, then begged Marjory to marry and go with him. He was six feet three, but he persuaded this little maid that he could not live without her—that loneliness would be his undoing. So they were married, not downstairs, as they ought to have been, but up in the cozy room where he had first seen her in the nurse's clothes.

Mr. Metcalf gave her away and Tom was best man, while Mrs. Metcalf stood very near and smiled through misty eyes. The little bride wore the white dress with the open neck and looked like a morning glory. In her hair she wore no orange flowers, no even a "sunburst, the gift of the groom"—but she did wear a moth eaten, much used feather duster.

Persian Ideas.

An American traveler in Persia learned that the common soldiers of the country supposed that the English practice of firing a salute at the burial of a soldier had for its object the driving away of devils. Other mistaken impressions no less absurd he reports in his "Persian Life and Customs."

A village soldier asked me if I knew of dog worshipers. I told him I had heard of fire worshipers, cow worshipers and the like, but not of dog worshipers. He said he had seen some in Teheran. Some foreigners there had fed dogs at their tables, had washed and clothed them, fondled them in their laps and taken them riding in their carriages. Were they not dog worshipers?

An English sea captain, whose ship touched at Bushire, took a horseback ride through the streets of the city, but made so poor a display of horsemanship as to astonish and amuse the people. The next day a vender of fruits came on board the ship and said to the captain:

"I have made such an explanation as to free you from all reproach. There is no one who does not think that you are an expert rider, as becomes one of a nation of horsemen."

"And how did you do that?" asked the captain.

"I told them you were drunk."

Dr. Todd's Joke.

An amusing example of the Irishman's pronunciation occurs in a story told of the late Dr. Todd, the Irish archaeologist, who, although a great scholar, was not above perpetrating a practical joke. The London Spectator tells the story and says:

A very learned Englishman went to Dublin to examine some manuscripts in the library of Trinity college and was of course introduced to Dr. Todd, who one day in conversation told him that there was in Trinity college a curious instance of the survival of a habit dating from the time of the Danes; that at a certain hour of the afternoon—I think 6 o'clock—a porter went the round of the college ringing a bell and calling out in a loud voice, "The Dane's in the hall," when all the students rushed from their rooms to repel the invaders. So the learned but somewhat incredulous Englishman repaired to the college at 6 o'clock, and, sure enough, what Dr. Todd had told him came to pass, which he gravely related on his return to England. The summons of course referred to the dean.

The Three Fates.

The names of the three fates were Clotho, Lachesis and Atropos. To express the influence which they were believed to exercise on human life from birth to death they were represented as spinning a thread of gold, silver or wool, now tightening, now slackening and at last cutting it off. Clotho, the youngest, put the wool around the spindle, Lachesis spun it, and the aged Atropos cut it off when a man had to die.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments, must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the stomach, etc.

A weak stomach causing dyspepsia, a weak heart with palpitation or intermittent pulse, always means weak stomach nerves or weak heart nerves. Strengthen these inside of controlling nerves with Dr. Shoop's Restorative and see how quickly these ailments disappear. Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis., will mail samples free. Write for them. A test will tell. Your health is certainly worth this.

NURSERY NOTES.

The firstborn is fortunately born if his young mother has wisely resolved to go slowly with infant theories and feel her way carefully and never go to extremes.

For the first week or two the child requires but slight attention. He must be bathed, dressed, fed and kept warm. Otherwise, for the most part, he is best when left alone, gradually to learn that he is alive and make use of his organs and senses.

He requires no handling save that which is necessary during the process of bathing and dressing, with an occasional turning from side to side. More than this is not good for him.

Then he must be kept warm. To do this it is not necessary to overburden him with wraps or keep the room at a hothouse temperature. If you do, you will have a baby as tender as a forced plant.

Select the clothing with a view to combined lightness and warmth. If the weather is at all cool, be certain that each little garment is warm before putting it on the body. Do not put the socks on while the feet are cool. First warm the little members with your own warm hands or by an open fire. Warm the hands in the same way and, if necessary, draw over them a pair of worsted mittens and let them remain for awhile until entirely warm.

A Puzzle.

"Do you think you will learn to like your titled son-in-law?"

"I don't know," answered Mr. Cumrox. "I can't quite tell where to place him in my expense account. He is neither a recreation nor an investment."

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proven mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about two and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the "Zon group in the Diamondfield section, second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. The phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made out by Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this treasury. Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Perney Hirtschman Tells His Part of Story

The Case Fully Reported, Proves the Work Was Done by Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Halifax, N.S., Sept. 25.—A well-known resident at 93 Sackville street, Mr. Perney Hirtschman, who has been in a somewhat serious condition lately, has recovered, and says, "Six months ago my appetite fell off and my health became very poor. I had terrible attacks of indigestion and often was unable to sleep at night. My poor color showed what an ill man I was. I tried numerous remedies but the only genuine one was Dr Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. Two boxes cured my indigestion. My appetite increased and my strength came back quickly. Today I have a fine zest for my meals. I feel as strong and healthy as a young boy. Because they are so cleansing and so tonic in their effect I think Dr Hamilton's Pills should be used by every person. My wife used them regularly with grand results.

New Place of Amusement Opened

The Crystal, the new automatic theater on George street, has opened up and is now in full swing. The first of opening night demonstrated that this recent addition to Peterborough's places of amusement has "caught on," and will receive a large share of public patronage. Miss Edwards was particularly acceptable in her new and well voiced songs. This seems to be a show at prices that don't compel a man to forget his winter's coal bills, whilst giving good amusement during its continuance.

Young Folks

THROWING THE MINIE DART.

An Amusing Toy That Any Handy Boy Can Make Himself.

Boys will find the minie dart a most amusing toy. Any boy can make one, and this is how it is done: Whittle a pine stick perfectly straight and round, a little larger in diameter than a lead pencil. The stick should be two feet long. With a small saw cut in one end a slit about five inches deep. Into this slit insert a piece of cardboard, first cutting it the shape of Fig. 1. Tack it in place with two or three tiny tacks. When this is done, balance the dart on your knife blade to find the center of gravity, and at the point of balance cut a notch slanting in the direction of the point away from the card end. The success of the toy depends on balancing correctly.

A piece of some springy wood is used for the whip. Cut this about three feet long and the diameter of a whip handle, tapering toward the end. To the tapering end of this stick fasten a stout string about two feet long, and at the other end of the string tie a knot. To shoot the dart hold it with the left hand near to the tail or paper end, holding the whip in the right hand, as you see the boy in the picture doing. Throw the string over the dart and draw it through the notch until it catches on the knot. Then, with a rapid upward motion, switch the whip, letting go the dart at the same time. The dart will leave the string and soar high into the air. Try it. It is lots of fun.

THE ODD LITTLE BAT.

Facts Concerning This Interesting Winged Animal.

"A bird!" does some little voice say? No, not a bird, but more nearly a winged mouse in looks. If mamma lets you stay out of doors when the evening comes on, you may see flying swiftly around the house something you will think is a bird. But if you could catch it you would find it a bat. Sometimes bats fly in at the doors or windows and go sailing around the room.

You will never see one in the daytime. They sleep all day and nearly all night, too, besides sleeping all winter. They go out only in the dusk of summer evenings after moths and insects, which are their food. And that is why they fly about here and there so swiftly. They fly with their mouths open so as to catch the insects as they fly.

The bats live in dark holes in roofs and walls of buildings and in fences. Their wings are then all folded up, and they hang by their claws or the hooks on their wings.

Perhaps you are afraid of bats and scream when one flies near you. But the common bats of our country are very harmless. They might bite a little if hurt, and who blames them for that?

There are many kinds of bats in other countries, some very large and ugly, that we might well be afraid of. Some have heads like foxes and dogs; all are very curiously made.—Philadelphia Record.

The Whippoorwill.

Probably few boys and girls have ever seen the little night bird called whippoorwill. That's a queer name for a bird, isn't it? It is called that because its note sounds like the word. One is rarely seen in the daytime, for it seldom appears until after the swallows have gone to their roosts, when it skims along the surface of the ground, seeking moths and other soft bodied insects, of which it is very fond. Sometimes it appears also between daybreak and sunrise, and its low notes are heard then as in the evening. Strange to say, it does not build a nest, but lays its eggs, generally two, of a greenish white spotted with blue and light brown, in a sort of haphazard fashion, on fallen leaves. One peculiarity of the bird is the formation of its mouth, which shows how nature adapts living things to their necessities and surroundings. The mouth is wide and gaping and has stiff bristles at the base of the bill to keep insects from escaping after they are caught.

The Basket Fish.

There's a queer looking animal on the sea floor of the Pacific ocean called the basket fish, because it looks like a basket or coarse network upside down. Little fishes come swimming into the holes and the animal's long arms that make the side of the basket grab the little fishes and draw them up into the greedy stomach.

Counting the Stars.

I tried so hard to count the stars
And got as far as three,
When many others sixty passed
And, smiling, blinked at me.

So I began it o'er again
And got as far as nine,
When all at once I seemed to see
A thousand others shine.

Then came so many in the sky
I would not try again.
For all 'twas counting that I knew
Is only up to ten.

Why The Fire was Not Reported

We owe our readers an apology or explanation for an omission that inadvertently occurred in yesterday's issue of The Times. This is concerning the seemingly unpardonable omission of any reference to the fire at Parker's Dye Works on Monday night. This we might explain was no fault possible, but an oversight or neglect. A Times representative at a late hour last night or as soon as all available news could be gleaned, brought it in. Unfortunately there was a practical illustration of the old proverb, "Man may propose but the gods dispose." Before this matter was "set up" our typesetting machines met with an accident thus making it impossible to print the report.

Live Wire Started the Fire

The loss by Monday night's fire at Parker's Dye Works, Charlotte street, will be very heavy. Over $1000 worth of goods was on hand to be greased, cleaned or dyed. Business however will be continued and orders taken as heretofore. It is thought the fire took its origon from a live wire. There seem to have been every class of the community from bank managers to bakers at work in an endeavor to stop the flames. It is said to say, the tired out members of the brigade were recalled to the scene at about five a.m. The loss on dyes alone will total many hundred dollars. Mr. Alfred Parker, who arrived in the city yesterday from Hamilton, places the total loss at $6000.

A WHITE BRITISH COLUMBIA SAYS BORDEN

Government is to Blame for the Japanese Influx and Must Accept the Responsibility--Canada Must not be Fettered

Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 26.—At his meeting here last night Mr. Borden referred to the Japanese immigration, declaring for a white British Columbia, and throwing the responsibility of the present influx on the government. He traced the history of the question, noting.

(1) The report of the Commission on Oriental Labor, condemning the Japanese settlement;

(2) The refusal of the government to exclude the Japanese the same as Chinese;

(3) The refusal of the government to insert an anti-Oriental labor clause in the Grand Trunk Pacific charter;

(4) Mr. Fisher's assurances in 1903 that the Japanese government discountenanced the emigration of Japanese laborers to Honolulu as well as to Canada;

(5) The conclusion of the Japanese-Canadian treaty of 1907, making Canada a party to the British-Japanese treaty of 1894, which for thirteen years had lain dormant, so far as Canada was concerned;

(6) W. T. R. Preston's arrival in the far east in 1907, after working in the London Canadian Labor Bureau to import European artisans;

(7) The fact that his arrival was followed by this evidently preconcerte

Continuing, he said the government has unnecessarily created a difficult situation and must accept the responsibility. Present conditions deter immigration to your province from European countries and will end in driving from the Pacific coast all laboring men of European races. The question is whether or not the province shall be dominated by the Canadian race or men of Oriental descent. If present conditions are permitted to continue, the question does not stop short of that point. The Laurier government, notwithstanding promises, has created this condition.

CANADA MUST NOT BE FETTERED.

After referring in courteous terms to the Japanese, Mr. Borden said the Conservative party will maintain one supreme consideration to which all others must give way; British Columbia must remain British, and a Canadian province inhabited and dominated by men in whose veins runs the blood of great pioneering races. While recognizing the duty of the empire, he would respectfully maintain that Canada in such vital essentials must be accorded freedom of judgment as perfect and unfettered as that exercised by other dominions of the empire and by Britain herself.

Mr. Borden referred in bitter terms to the promised inquiry into British Columbia's position.

A NEW INDUSTRY

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION" INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP, which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use, millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs neither boosting nor boasting, for if we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present advice is becoming easier almost immediately, wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

Address your enquiries to:

Orillia Y. M. C. A Opening

The Times is in receipt of a card of invitation to attend the opening exercises to be held on Sunday and Monday, September 29th and 30th, in the new building of the Orillia Y.M.C.A. The dedicatory service is on Sunday at 8.30 p.m., and the opening ceremony at 3 p.m. Monday. The invitation is accompanied by a handsomely gotten up program of unique design, printed in two colors. His honor, Sir W. Mortimer Clarke, Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, will speak at the opening ceremony on Monday.

A Summons in Place of Subpoena

Yesterday morning as a member of the local police force was walking along a business street, with a handful of subpoenas he was about to serve on a number of witnesses wanted at the police court, a well known merchant, in fun stopped the officer and jokingly said, "Here you are now, if you have one of those papers for me, you can serve it right here." The officer smiled audibly and passed on. Within half an hour later he returned with a paper for the same merchant. This time, however it was not a subpoena but a genuine all wool and a yard wide summons for the joker whose presence is required at the court to explain why, after being duly warned to take down a projecting sign in front of his place of business, he had not done so. He is not smiling now.

Whitby Murderer Adjudged Insane

Adam Lodwick the Whitby wife murder has saved his neck from the rope owing to a merciful jury adjudging him insane. Dr. Bruce Smith of the Ontario Government service has endorsed this opinion of the local physicians, as has Dr. Bremner of the Mimico Asylum. The prisoner's suffering from melancholia. There seems no doubt but what Lodwick fired the fatal shot, but British justice will not permit of a crazy man being hanged when his deed was wrought whilst in a state of non compos mentis. It seems that last January Lodwick was injured by a tree falling on him at Mr. Thompson's a neighbor. Since the accident her father had said queer things and her mother had desired to keep the fact from the neighbors. For weeks her father had not gone to bed at night, fearing to die. Often he said he was going to die.

(Kansas City Star, Aug. 27, 1907.)

At a dinner given last night to a few of the friends of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway Company at the Kansas City Club, A. E. Stilwell, president of the company, presented to those present the advantage of at once selling $850,000 of this company's townsite notes. Mr. Stilwell explained the condition of the construction work and said that 200 miles more of steel was necessary to connect the line between San Angelo, Tex., and Kansas City.

After going over the matter fully E. F. Swinney, president of the First National Bank, subscribed for $5,000 of these townsite notes for his bank and said that the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway would be one of the greatest factors in the future developments of this city.

"You all know what the Kansas City Southern Railway has done for us," he said, "but I believe there will be no comparison between the benefits to be derived from the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient and those we have derived from the Kansas City Southern."

SUPPORT FROM BANKERS.

Following Mr. Swinney, F. P. Neal, vice president of the Union National Bank, said he believed that the Orient Railway was now at the turn and that it was the duty of everybody in this section of the country to subscribe for these townsite notes, both as an investment and to hurry the completition of the road. Mr. Neal made a personal subscription and subscribed for $5,000 for his bank.

J. W. Wagner, president of the German-American Bank, and H. C. Lambert, vice president, subscribed $5,000 of the townsite notes. Others who subscribed were G. M. Smith, president of the Central National Bank, who took nine notes; F. W. Goebel, president of the Commercial National Bank of the West Side, who took $1,000 for himself and $2,000 for his bank; A. E. Holmes, city treasurer, subscribed for $2,000. J. B. Reynolds, president of the Kansas City Life Insurance Company; E. J. Sanford, K. L. Browne, George Neff, L. N. Leslie and Frank M. Howe. It was suggested that the following card be prepared;

VERY IMPORTANT.

The business interests of the Middle West, appreciating the vital importance of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway, and the desirability of having trains operating from Kansas City to San Angelo, Tex., a distance of 711 miles, and the importance of having this road controlled in the West, are purchasing its securities.

The prompt sale of $850,000 collateral trust notes authorized, will connect Kansas City and San Angelo, Tex., by January 1, 1908.

This investment offers absolute security, 7 per cent. interest, with an additional 5 per cent bonus upon retiring of the bonds.

Denominations $500.

DO IT TODAY.

All those who attend this meeting agreed to send these cards out in all of their mail for the next thirty days, and all merchants, banks and business men of Kansas City are going to be asked to do the same thing until this entire issue is sold.

Chief Roszel After Illuminated Signs

Those Who Have Not Paid Their $2 License Fees to be Prosecuted

In conversation with the chief The Times ascertained yesterday that none of those having such signs have, as yet paid their license. As the fees were payable last May, Chief Roszel is now giving this last warning and will, in a day or two proceed to summons all delinquents, who will then, when brought to the police court, not only have to pay the fee but will have in addition to pay all costs of the court.

Pretty Wedding In St. John's Church

Mr. Fred L. Roy Has Joined the Great Army of Benedicts

Yesterday afternoon scores of people and many conveyances wended their way up the hill to St. John's church, the object being to see or participate in the pretty ceremony enacted within these venerable, vine-clad walls.

The attraction of yesterday was the marriage of Miss Mona Morris Dott Cavanah, eldest daughter of the late J. H. Cavanah, of Lethbridge, Alta., and of Mrs. Cavanah, 198 London street, to Mr. Frederick Lewis Roy, youngest son of Mr. R. M. Roy, of this city. The bride possesses a wide circle of friends, while the bridegroom is a most energetic and popular young man.

At 2.30 o'clock the bridal party entered the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by the organist, Mr. R. J. Devey. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. Wm. Green. She was charmingly attired in a gown of white silk mesu de soie, with trimmings of Irish rose point lace and brussels point lace, and wore the conventional bridal veil, surmounted with orange blossoms.

The maid of honor, Miss Ola Cavanah, sister of the bride, was gowned in white silk organdie, trimmed with silk and lace and insertion. The bridesmaids were Misses Gladys Roy, sister of the groom, Eva Green and Lela Crookshank, of Blenheim cousins of the bride. The groom was supported by Mr. Will Cavanah, of Richford Vt., brother of the bride. The ushers were Messrs Graham Ferguson, Ross Cameron and Ernie Ford. While the register was being signed, Mr. R. Rice, of Montreal sang an appropriate solo.

After the ceremony the bridal party drove to the residence of Mr. Wm. Green, 375 Brock street where a reception was held.

New Tool Company For Peterboro

It seems that Peterborough's busy family of manufactories is about to have an increase. This will be the Dominion Tool Co., which has been granted a Provincial charter. The capitalization of this most recent company is $100,000 divided into 1000 shares at $100 each. The headquarters of the new company will be at Peterborough, and those financing the deal are all local men as follows.—Jas Davidson, F. R. J. MacPherson, P. J. Creedon, F. C. Cobitt, Jr., F. P. McNulty and W. R. G. Higgins. The provisional directors are James Davidson, P. J. Creedon, F. R. J. MacPherson, Dr. McNulty and F. C. Cobitt.

This latest addition to Peterborough's industries intends to make augers, bits and other tools. They will also carry on the manufacture and sale of bolts, rivets, screws and nails and make machinery for the manufacture of the same.

The company intend starting operations at once and will employ a fairly large number of hands to start it is understood that a building has been secured and that the installation of the necessary machinery will start at once. The new industry will be somewhat similar to the Rapid Tool Company, and as several valuable patents have been secured the new concern has bright prospects.

With a practical man like Mr. Creedon in the company, to whose efforts the success, now assured of the Rapid Tool Co., is largely due, the new company has an almost absolutely assured success.

Presentation and Address to Mr. G. L. Payne

By Members of Otonabee Lodge of Oddfellows--Mr. Payne is Leaving for Needles, B C

A pleasing feature of the special meeting of Otonabee Lodge of Oddfellows held last night in their hall on George street, was the presentation of a handsome cast grand's jewell and an address to Mr. L. G. Payne, who is about to leave this city for Needles, B.C.

The departing brother has been an active worker and popular member of Otonabee Lodge for seven or eight years, and his departure for the west is regretted, not only by members of his own lodge, but also by Oddfellows in general throughout the city. The presentation was followed by many eulogistic references on the part of members present, to Mr. L. G. Payne's exemplary conduct during his residence in Peterborough and his admirable exemplification of the principles inculcated in the story of David and Jonathan, whose lives all true Oddfellows strive to emulate.

Although leaving Peterborough to take up his residence in Needles, Mr. Payne intends still continuing in affiliation with Otonabee Lodge, in which so many of his pleasing memories are centered.

WOOLLEN MILL BUSINESS WAS HARD HIT

A Manufacturer Declares The Preferential Tariff Hit Them Hard--There are no Large Factories for Woollen Machinery in Canada

Toronto, Sept. 26.—"The woollen mill business was hard hit by the preferential tariff," said Mr. L. Bredanmaz, a manufacturer of machinery for woollen mills, who is attending the convention here. He claims to know the condition of the industry throughout the country.

"There is $3,000,000 worth of property closed up since the tariff came in force," he told the press, "and I have purchased the machinery in five different mills."

Mr. Bredanmaz is a Frenchman by birth, but has been in this country for thirty years. He learned the manufacture of woollen machinery in France.

"There are no large factories for woollen machinery in Canada because the market is too restricted," he stated. "There are only some 500 or 600 woollen mills in the country, and many of them are quite small. I hold agencies for a number of French Belgian and Swiss manufacturers besides the manufacturing I do myself."

Britain Ties Hands of Bond Regarding the Fishery Laws

St. John's, Nfld., Sept. 26.—An Imperial rescript forbidding the service by any colonial authority of any legal process regarding fishery rights aboard any American vessel, and suspending all colonial statutes authorizing colonial officials to seize American vessels for alleged fishery offences, was proclaimed here yesterday.

This, it is believed, will make it practically impossible for Premier Bond to carry out his recently announced decision to enforce the colonial fishery laws.

Scattergood Gave Up Walk 20 Miles East of Toronto

Toronto, Sept. 25.—Scattergood, the young Oshawa man who tried to break Jimmie Reynold's record by walking from Port Hope to Toronto and return under 38 hours broke down at the Rougehill, 20 miles east of Toronto at 12 o'clock last night, and was taken to Pickering in a rig, in a very much used-up condition.

The weather man was none too kind to the walker for it rained hard from the time he left Port Hope, until Bowmanville, 38 miles this side of Port Hope, was reached in the afternoon. Oshawa was reached forty minutes ahead of schedule time, and a luke-warm bath taken at the Oshawa House, followed by a rub-down. Pickering, the next stopping place, was entered at 10.05 p.m., which was quite up to the schedule, and here a quarter-hour rest was taken, and another rub-down at the Gordon House. Manager Fern did not allow his man to lie down as his muscles would have become stiffened, and his walking powers interfered with.

According to the schedule layed down by Fenn Scattergood was to have reached Toronto at four o'clock this morning, stop for an hour at the King Edward, and then start back for Port Hope.

But the plan was not carried out, for a message to the press from the Rougehill Hotel stated that the would-be record-breaker had given out entirely, and had been taken back to Pickering in a rig.

Oshawa, Sept. 25.—Mr. Wm. Scattergood of this town, who started to walk 128 miles in 38 hours, did not start on my wager, or for any purse, the Pedlin Metal Roofing Company, with whom he is employed, taking charge of the event. He left Oshawa yesterday morning at 2 o'clock and arrived in Port Hope at 10.10. 40 minutes behind his schedule. He left Port Hope at 10.35.

Scattergood expected to arrive back here at 3 p.m. today. It was planned to meet him with the pipers band and take him in an auto in a procession to the fair grounds and round the track. This is eight miles under that the trip undertaken by Jimmie Reynolds, the Port Hope harrier, in June last, in which he latter failed by a few miles.

Mr. Scattergood recently walked from Oshawa to Toronto and return in 16 hours, 23 minutes, a distance of 64 miles. Should Mr. Scattergood accomplish the feat of walking the 138 miles in 38 hours, he will have beaten any record on Canadian soil. If he made good the South Ontario Agricultural Society was to present him with a medal. He was being accompanied by Percy Fenn, his trainer, and a referee in a rig.

News Briefs

The Toronto baseball team defeated Columbus yesterday by a score of 12 to 4.

London, Sept. 26.—The observatories at Laibach, Austria, and on the Isle of Wight reported a severe earthquake, lasting one hour and a half, at ten o'clock last night. The distance is estimated at 7,000 miles.

New York, Sept. 26.—Peter Brooksby of Rensselaer, N.Y., an engineer, 35 years old, and Wm. Neiss of this city, a fireman, were killed early yesterday by an engine in the New York Central Railroad yards at 104th street, and Harlem River. They stepped from one track to get out of the way of a Poughkeepsie express and on to another track, where a switch-engine ran them down and killed them instantly.

"What Which"

A Husband's Question

When a man from drinking coffee gets to such a condition that he cannot eat breakfast without throwing up, it seems time to quit, but there are thousands of people who do not understand that when an article of food or drink produces such conditions as these, it should be absolutely left off.

A little woman up in Monc. writes that she and her husband knew enough to quit coffee when it stopped them here. She says: "My husband was so badly affected that he ate no breakfast for three or four years. He would attempt to drink a few sips of coffee and invariably threw it up.

When Postum Food Coffee was brought to my attention I tried it without having any faith in it, but when I found what a delicious beverage it was when prepared according to directions, and from trying it on myself found there were no bad effects, I induced husband to take a cup without telling him what it was. He objected at first, saying that he would be sure to throw it up, but when I insisted upon his trying it, it agreed with him.

"Morning after morning I gave him Postum without telling him that it was any different from ordinary coffee. His stomach quickly recovered and he began to eat breakfast. He asked me one morning as he called for a second cup 'what witch' had taught me to make such delicious coffee' and where I found some that would agree with him? Then I told him for the first time that he had not been drinking coffee but Postum, which had so strengthened his stomach that he could now eat as much breakfast as any one.

"My two sisters were badly troubled with stomach disorder but after leaving off coffee and taking Postum they both recovered their appetites and took on considerable flesh. I wish everyone could be induced to use the health-giving, aromatic Postum.' 'There's a Reason.' Read 'The Road to Wellville,' in pkgs.

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 24 1907.

PAUPERISM DECLINING.

Due to Better Employment During Last Year.

The half-yearly statement on pauperism in England and Wales shows a decline in the number of persons on the rates. On January 1st last the total number of persons relieved was 145,383 in London and 775,455 outside London, the aggregate of 920,838 being 5,903 less than the number on Jan. 1st, 1906. The percentage of decline for the whole country was 0.6, the percentage for London alone being 2.2, and for the provinces 0.3. The decrease in the pauperism of the urban counties corresponds with improved conditions of employment in the principal industries, particularly the engineering and cotton trades, which marked the year 1906. The building trade and coal-mining industries also, in which there had been in previous years some lack of employment, particularly in the former, showed some improvement. Excluding casuals and the insane, London pauperism showed a decline of 3.1 per cent., but the different districts showed great variations, as will be seen from the following table

	Rate per 1,000	Difference in rate.
West	18.5	—0.2
North	23.7	—0.5
Central	51.5	—0.1
East	31.9	—3.5
South	23.5	—0.8

In only one district is there an increase and the biggest decrease is in the east, chiefly due to a decline of 25 per cent. in Poplar. The unions bordering on London show an increase in Croydon and Edmonton of 11 per cent., in Brentford 13 per cent., Willesden 16 per cent., and Dartford 25 per cent. West Ham showed a reduction of 16 per cent., and Romford of 10 per cent.

It is worthy of note that the whole class of able-bodied paupers showed a decrease of 5,472 on the previous year's figures, but those not able-bodied increased by 7,433 or 1.7 per cent. London, Essex, and Lancashire showed the biggest decreases. A general decline in casual pauperism, amounting to 14 per cent., is noted.

The most aggravating kind of a person to live in the house with is one

SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE.

Gross Carelessness In Using Firearms —Natives Taken For Baboons.

Attention is drawn by The Diamond Fields Advertiser to the number of accidents which occur in South Africa through carelessness in handling firearms. "The details," says the journal, "read more like the chronicle of years of pioneer hunting in an unsettled country, or of mishaps connected with defending hearths and homes against wild beasts or savage enemies, than the merely casual and incomplete summary of shooting accidents in civilised South Africa during one year. 1906. It is impossible to avoid the impression that, in the main, there must be a considerable amount of gross carelessness on the part of people who ought to know better. Enemies of South Africa might be tempted to comment on the ugly aspect of more than one of those occurrences, where natives were mistaken for baboons. That is no new thing in the country, although it might be supposed that a natural reluctance to run the risk of shedding human blood would suffice to make the sportsman stay his hand for a few minutes, in order to make certain as to the real nature of his intended victim. It is noteworthy, however, that the small unthinking heedlessness was shown in more than one case where white men were mistaken for bucks, and had to endure the consequences of their supposed resemblance to the ruminant creation, even as the natives had to suffer for their fancied relationship to the monkey. But perhaps the most tragic feature of the year's fatalities is the part played in them by children. Surely the time has arrived when grown-up people should know better than to place loaded firearms within the reach of juveniles, or when, if they do not, the law should teach them."

QUEEN'S DRESSING TABLE.

Is Simply Appointed—Czarina Said to Be Extravagant.

Queen Alexandra has reached an age where it is hardly a compliment to speak of her beauty as that of a young woman. But her figure and her complexion are utterly untouched by either years or sorrows. It is still easy to see how remarkable was once her beauty, but the Queen's dressing table, in the paucity of its appliances and cosmetics, is said to be a little disappointing. Alexandra is popularly supposed to shun everything for the complexion except cold cream, but in the matter of cold cream she is lavish, applying it freely and allowing it to remain on the skin all night. For perfumes she confines herself to eau-de-cologne and violet.

But on the other side of the scale is the Czarina, who is said to spend $20,000 a year for perfumes alone. Indeed, the imperial lady seems to be something of a fanatic in the matter of scents. Hundreds of girls are annually employed packing blossoms, of which the essences are to appear presently in the scores of little bottles that adorn the Czarina's silver and malachite dressing tables. Every bottle is tested at the Government laboratory in St. Petersburg, and it takes a small army of officials and workpeople to keep the Empress supplied with her favorite perfumes.

The Czarina's soap, like most of her scents, is made in Paris after a secret formula which is shared by no one else. Indeed, the chief charm of such extravagant whimsicality as this is the fact that it is entirely exclusive. Considering the present condition of Russia — of which possibly the Empress has not yet heard—she might, perhaps, do better than thus to accentuate her resemblances to Marie Antoinette.

Lawlessness In Ireland.

Remarks of a very strong character on the lawlessness prevailing in Ireland were made by Mr. Justice Wright in charging the grand jury at the recent Roscommon Assizes.

His lordship said the cattle driving movement was absolutely lawless, and entirely subversive of the rights of property. It had attained a strength which was a formidable menace to public peace. The police had apparently been unable to check it, but if it was not grappled with vigorously it would lead that part of the country to a state of anarchy.

In one case the cattle on the farm of Robert Payne were driven off in the presence of a body of police, who were unable to prevent it. The raiders were prosecuted before the magistrates, who, by a majority, refused informations, but the Crown, realising the gravity of the case, had themselves sent up bills.

One gentleman who had to be protected by a police patrol was Mr. George Kelly, a member of the Irish Bar, who was partly boycotted because he had been one of the magistrates who had ordered eight defendants to give bail or go to gaol for cattle raiding.

A woman who was a small shopkeeper had been threatened with the loss of her trade if she continued to supply the police with food or groceries.

Bills were sent to the grand jury in two cases of cattle driving and intimidation.

Spurs On Their Wings.

As every one knows, the gamecock's chief weapons are the spurs which nature has placed upon its heels, but there is a species of geese in Africa which have spurs on their wings. One of the wrist bones projects beyond the other and is surmounted by the spur, which consists of a hard substance measuring an inch and a half in length.

The Difference.

There is this difference between a wise man and a fool—the wise man expects future things, but does not depend upon them, and in the meantime enjoys the present, remembering the past with delight, but the life of the fool is wholly carried on to the future.

A Difference.

She promised to love and obey,
But ere a month had flown
Her husband didn't even dare
To call his soul his own.

Bathing.

Cleanliness is next to godliness, and it is likewise essential to health. There is no apology for filth, and filth breeds disease. Germs do not like cleanliness, and they almost exert themselves to avoid it, so to keep clean is essential. Every child should receive either a sponge or a tub bath each day. The skin contains small glands, which should constantly carry off the poisons which collect within us. When the skin is dirty these glands do not act and these poisons are retained and give rise to ill health. Bathing keeps their ducts open, stimulates their action and thus aids in the process of elimination, thereby improving the nutrition. It is evident, therefore, that the idea that frequent bathing in the winter months is dangerous is wrong. National Congress of Mothers' Magazine.

The Family Physician

The best medicines in the world cannot take the place of the family physician. Consult him early when taken ill. If the trouble is with your throat, bronchial tubes, or lungs, ask him about taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Do as he says.

An Invitation.

"Mabel," he said, "I love you. I place my happiness in your hands"—

"For goodness sake," she cried pleadingly, "don't do it now!"

"Why not?"

"Because I'm quite sure I'll need both hands in a minute or so to keep you from kissing me."

An Adage Vindicated.

"Where there's so much smoke there must be some fire."

The boss was speaking. He had just detected the office boy consuming a cigarette on the premises.

The adage was verified immediately. The boy got the fire.

The Very Worst.

Schoolmistress—Now, tell me the truth, Johnny Jones. You know what will happen if you tell a lie, don't you? Johnny Jones—Yes, ma'am; I'll go to a bad place. Schoolmistress—Yes, and that isn't the worst of it. You'll also be expelled from school.

Odd Rubbing Posts.

Rubbing posts for cattle, made of whale's jaws, are to be seen in the village of Hawsker, in England, and represent the whale trade formerly carried on at that place. They stand twelve feet or so above the ground.

The Whale's Laminae.

The age of whales is ascertained by the size and number of laminae of the whalebone, which increase yearly. Ages of 300 and 400 years have been assigned to whales from these indications.

Bath Mats.

Bath mats may be made of discarded bedspreads by cutting from the firm part squares of desired size and hemming. These mats are nice to lay on the floor beside the bathtub when the latter is in use, but should be folded and hung in a convenient place, as they are not heavy enough to take the place of a rug.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2000 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 60 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell it at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

CHAPTER I.

The good people of Devonshire were rather given to quarreling sometimes about the minister's wife, meek, gentle Mrs. Tiverton, whose manner of housekeeping, or style of dress, did not exactly suit them; sometimes about the minister himself, good, patient Mr. Tivertan, who vainly imagined that if he preached three sermons a week, attended the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, the Thursday evening sewing society, officiated at every funeral, visited all the sick, and gave to every beggar who called at his door, besides superintending the Sunday school, he was earning his salary of six hundred per year.

Sometimes, and that not rarely, the quarrel crept into the choir, and then, for one whole Sunday, it was all in vain that Mr. Tiverton read the psalm and hymn; casting troubled glances toward the vacant seats of his refractory singers. There was no one to respond, unless it were good old Mr. Hodges, who pitched so high that few could follow him; while Mrs. Captain Simpson—whose daughter, the organist, had been snubbed at the last choir meeting by Mr. Hodges' daughter, the alto singer—rolled up her eyes at her next neighbor, or fanned herself furiously in token of her disgust.

Latterly, however, there had come up a new cause of quarrel, before which every other cause sank into insignificance. Now, though the village of Devonshire could boast but one public schoolhouse, said house being divided into two departments, the upper and lower divisions, there were in the town several district schools; and for the last few years a committee of three had been annually appointed to examine and decide upon the merits of the various candidates for teaching, giving to each, if the decision were favorable, a little slip of paper certifying their qualifications to teach a common school. Strange that over such an office so fierce a feud should have arisen; but when Mr. Tiverton, Squire Lamb, and Lawyer Whittemore, in the full conviction that they were doing right, refused a certificate of scholarship to Laura Tisdale, niece of Mrs. Judge Tisdale, and awarded it to one whose earnings in a factory had procured for her a thorough English education, the villagers, to use a vulgar phrase, were at once set by the ears, the aristocracy abusing, and the democracy upholding the dismayed trio, who, as the breeze blew harder, quietly resigned their office, and Devonshire was without a school committee.

In this emergency something must be done, and, as the two belligerent parties could only unite on a stranger, it seemed a matter of special providence that only two months before, young Dr. Holbrook, a native of the modern Athens, had rented the pleasant little office on the village common, formerly occupied by old Dr. Carey, now lying in the graveyard by the side of some whose days he had prolonged, and others whose days he had surely shortened. Besides being handsome, and skillful, and quite as familiar with the poor as the rich, the young doctor was descended from the aristocratic line of Boston Holbrooks, facts which tended to make him a favorite with both classes; and, greatly to his surprise, he found himself unanimously elected to the responsible office of sole Inspector of Common Schools in Devonshire. It was in vain that he remonstrated, saying he knew nothing whatever of the qualifications requisite for a teacher; that he could not talk to girls, young ones especially; that he should make a miserable failure, and so forth. The people would not listen. Somebody must examine the teachers, and that somebody might as well be Dr. Holbrook as anybody.

"Only be strict with 'em, draw the reins tight, find out to your satisfaction whether a gal knows her P's and Q's before you give her a sartificut. We've had enough of your ignoramuses," said Colonel Lewis, the democratic potentate to whom Dr. Holbrook was expressing his fears that he should not give satisfaction. Then, as a bright idea suggested itself to the old gentleman, he added "I tell you what, just cut one or two at first; that'll give you a shame for being particular, which is just the thing."

Accordingly, with no definite idea as to what was expected of him, except that he was to find out "whether a girl knew her P's and Q's," and was also to "cut one or two of the first candidates," Dr. Holbrook accepted the office, and then awaited rather nervously his initiation. He was not easy in the society of ladies, unless, indeed, the lady stood in need of his professional services, when he lost sight of her at once, and thought only of her disease. His patient once well, however, he became nervously shy and embarrassed, retreating as soon as possible from her presence to the covert of his friendly office, where, with his boots upon the table and his head thrown back in a most comfortable position, he sat one April morning, in happy oblivion of the bevy of girls who must, of course, ere long invade his sanctum.

"Something for you, sir. The lady will wait for an answer," said his "chore boy," passing to his master a little three-cornered note, and nodding toward the street.

Following the direction indicated, the doctor saw, drawn up near his door, an old-fashioned one-horse wagon, such as is still occasionally seen in New England. A square-boxed, dark green wagon, drawn by a sorrel horse, sometimes called by the genuine Yankee "yellow," and driven by a white-haired man, whose silvery locks, falling around his wrinkled face, gave to him a pleasing, patriarchal appearance, which interested the doctor far more than did the flutter of the blue ribbon beside him, even though the bonnet that ribbon tied shaded the face of a young girl. The note was from her, and, tearing it open, the doctor read, in the neatest of all pretty, girlish handwriting "Dr. Holbrook."

Here it was plainly visible that a "D" had been written as if she would have said "Dear." Then, evidently changing her mind, she had with her finger blotted out the "D," and made it into an oddly shaped "S," so that it read simply:

"Dr. Holbrook—Sir: Will you be at leisure to examine me on Monday afternoon, at three o'clock?

"Madeline A. Clyde.

"P.S.—For particular reasons I hope you can attend to me as early as Monday. M.A.C."

Dr. Holbrook knew very little of girls, but he thought this note, with its P.S., decidedly girlish. Still he made no comment, either verbal or mental, so flurried was he with knowing that the evil he so much dreaded had come upon him at last. Had it been left to his choice, he would far rather have extracted every one of that maiden's teeth, than to have set himself up before her like some horrid ogre, asking what she knew. But the choice was not his, and, turning to the boy, he said, laconically, "Tell her to come."

Most men would have sought for a glimpse of the face under the bonnet tied with blue, but Dr. Holbrook did not care a picayune whether it were ugly or fair, though it did strike him that the voice was singularly sweet, which, after the boy had delivered his message, said to the old man, "Now, grandpa, we'll go home I know you must be tired."

Slowly Sorrel trotted down the street, the blue ribbons fluttering in the wind, while one little ungloved hand was seen carefully adjusting about the old man's shoulders the ancient camlet cloak which had done duty for many a year, and was needed on this chill April day. The doctor saw all this, and the impression left upon his mind was that Candidate No. 1 was probably a nicish kind of a girl, and very good to her grandfather. But what should he ask her, and how demean himself toward her? Monday afternoon was frightfully near, he thought, as this was only Saturday; and then, feeling that he must be ready, he brought out from the trunk, where, since his arrival in Devonshire, they had been quietly lying, books enough to have frightened an older person than poor little Madeline Clyde, riding slowly home with grandpa, and wishing so much that she'd had a glimpse of Dr. Holbrook, so as to know what he was like, and hoping he would give her a chance to repeat some of the many pages of geography and "Parley's History," which she knew by heart. How she would have trembled could she have seen the formidable volumes heaped upon his table and waiting for her. There were French and Latin grammars, "Hamilton's Metaphysics," "Olmstead's Philosophy," "Day's Algebra," "Butler's Analogy," and many others, into which poor Madeline had never so much as looked. Arranging them in a row, and half wishing himself back again to the days when he had studied them, the doctor went out to visit his patients, of which there were so many that Madeline Clyde entirely escaped his mind, nor did she trouble him again until the dreaded Monday came, and the hands of his watch pointed to two.

"One hour more," he said to himself, just as the roll of wheels and a cloud of dust announced the approach of something.

Could it be Sorrel and the square-boxed wagon? Oh, no; far different from Grandfather Clyde's turnout were the stylish carriage and the spirited bays dashing down the street, the colored driver reining them suddenly, not before the office door, but just in front of the white cottage in the same yard, the house where Dr. Holbrook boarded, and where, if he ever married in Devonshire, he would most likely bring his wife.

"Guy Remington, the very chap of all others whom I'd rather see, and, as I live, there's Agnes, with Jessie. Who knew she was in these parts?" was the doctor's mental exclamation, as, running his fingers through his hair and making a feint of pulling up the corners of his rather limp collar, he hurried out to the carriage, from which a dashing-looking lady of thirty, or thereabouts, was alighting.

For an Old Time Room.

They were at a utility table at a charity bazaar, and everybody seemed to ignore them, to consider them probably only two ugly little bands of white crocheted cotton with a cord running through the scalloped edge on one side, but when Miss M. discovered them among a pile of iron holders and dust cloths she bought them without even asking the price, and in her joy at getting them she would probably have paid $5 for them as readily as she did 50 cents.

"Just what I have wanted for ages," she sighed with satisfaction as she hugged her little bundle close to her side and departed with her chum.

"What are they—wash rags?"

"Hushers."

"Whatever are they?" demanded her friend.

"Easily telling you're not from New England," replied Miss M., who then explained the mission of hushers. "They slip over the edges of soup dishes and other articles of the wash stand furnishing and, as their name suggests, deaden all noise. They are quaint and old timey and will give just the finishing touch to my colonial bedroom."

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. The tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effect is charming, pleasingly delightful, timely, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.

If it's painful periods with women, same cause.

If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That simply is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop pain in minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the normal blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and do n't it get red, and swell and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is always. It's simply Common Sense.

We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

Presence of Mind.

A captured Turkish officer on being led forth to execution asked for a glass of water before he died. On receiving it he looked uneasily around, as if afraid of assassination.

"Drink," said the commander. "No harm shall come to thee until thou hast drunk that water."

Instantly the commander's word was given the prisoner dashed the water on the sandy ground and thereby saved his life.

Canadian Workers.

Interviewed at Victoria, B.C., recently, J. Kier Hardie, M. P., said: "The condition of the workers in Canada is as far as I can see, about the level of subsistence. Income and expenditure about balance and it is my opinion that the condition of the worker will become worse.

"The next generation will find the struggle for existence just as keen here as it now is in the old countries. I attribute this condition mainly to the present insane policy of allowing public lands to be given to or acquired by speculators."

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accelerator and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeo group in the Diamondfield section, second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. The phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross cuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as transfer on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Fall Fair Opens Today

The Great Peterborough Fair opens today. It is now up to our citizens to turn out en masse, and show that this city can get up as well attended a fair as any city twice our size in Canada. Apart from the local patriotic motives that should impel a large attendance, the fair and its attractions are of a character to make it worth their while, and a little more so, if every man, woman and child in Peterborough take it in. The exhibits are the best Peterborough has ever seen and the attractions are of the highest quality.

A Mexican Mine of Wonderful Wealth

200 Men are now at Work in La Republica Mine

Mexico since the days of Montizuma, has always been coupled in the world's mind with thoughts of unlimited quantities of the precious metals. The Spaniards of by gone days sent galleons loaded to the decks with cargoes of gold and silver to the northern country. In modern days mine after mine, rich in these metals are being opened up and operated, mainly by English and American capital, so that the production now is greater by far than when the Spaniards used to rob the natives of their hoards of gold.

Among the mines recently discovered, and in successful operation is the La Republica situated in the western part of the State of Chihuahua, Mexico, on the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway, and from which over $17,000 worth of rich silver ore has already been sent to the smelter. There are now on the surface over 28,000 tons of ore with a gross value of $1,758,000. This mine is guaranteed by the United States & Mexican Trust Co., and in November, this company announces, will pay in dividends one-half the net earnings. When the property is completely equipped and in full running order the total net earnings will be paid in dividends. The United States and Mexican Trust Co., of Kansas City, Mo., and Mexico City, Mexico, is now offering shares in the above mine at $3.25 per share, par value $5 each.

For full particulars write the Trust Company, or call at W. K. Hall, local representative.

PUGET SOUND NAVY YARD.

Uncle Sam's Splendid Naval Base on the Pacific.

The Puget sound navy yard is located at the head of Port Orchard, an inlet from Puget sound, in Kitsap county, Wash. The yard is approximately 130 statute miles from the open sea, is 2,400 miles from Honolulu, 4,000 miles from Panama and 6,000 miles from Manila. It can be said without exaggeration that the yard is the best situated naval station in the world. There are two channels leading from the main sound to the navy yard, one from the north through Agate pass and the other from the east through Rich's passage. The bottom of the bay descends quite rapidly to a depth at mean low tide of thirty feet, sufficient to float the largest man-of-war. After reaching this depth the bed of the bay descends slowly to the middle, where a depth of sixty feet is reached. Port Orchard bay, the harbor in front of the navy yard, covers an area of about three square miles, thus affording secure anchorage, with excellent holding ground in from six to eight fathoms, for at least fifty men-of-war. The yard is located at some distance from any commercial ports, so the use of the harbor will never be interfered with by merchant vessels. The bay is closely landlocked, the only entrance to it being a channel not over a half mile wide.

On account of its situation the yard would be practically impregnable in time of war. Three distinct systems of forts have been established for its protection. They are Forts Flagler, Casey and Worden near the entrance to Puget sound, Fort Lawton on Magnolia bluff, just north of Seattle, and Fort Ward, situated on both sides of the channel at the entrance to Rich's passage.

The yard covers an area of 200 acres and employs an average force of 630 men. The present dry dock is constructed with a concrete bottom, wooden sides and concrete coping. Its length is 650 feet, width at top 130 feet, at bottom 67 feet and depth 30 feet. It cost $700,000 and is the third largest in the world. An efficient pumping plant is maintained in connection with the dock. There are two machine shops. The larger, belonging to the department of steam engineering, is 200 feet by 96 feet and is fitted with an ample equipment of heavy machine tools. The shops are motor driven on the group system, but there is no central power station. There is also a forge shop and foundry similar in size and adequacy of equipment to the machine shops. All these shops are well designed and placed and are fitted with traveling cranes and other devices for the rapid and economical handling of heavy materials. In addition to the metal working shops there is a corresponding equipment of woodworking shops, a boat shop, a paint shop and an equipment building. The yard is provided with a standard gauge railway, which, together with a forty ton and several smaller jib-cranes serving the dry dock, affords an effective and efficient system of internal transportation.—H. Cole Estep in Engineering Magazine.

Already Dated.

In certain London railway stations the proprietors of the lunch counters have a custom of dating eggs—that is, they mark on the shell of a boiled egg the date on which it was laid. The evident purpose is to reassure doubting customers. The possible result is less comforting.

A party arrived at the station shortly before midnight and, following the habit of all American travelers, made at once for the lunch counter. They demanded eggs and asked that they might have some of that very day's laying.

"Sorry, sir," said the clerk. "Today's beggs is all gone, but," glancing at the clock, which pointed to a quarter before 12, "if you'd not mind the date Hi could give you some of tomorrow's."—Youth's Companion.

A Tart Rejoinder.

The movement to erect a monument to Nicholas Flood Davin in British Columbia brings to mind his triumphant encounter with Senator McMullen ten years ago or so. McMullen was making a speech when Davin interrupted with an inquiry that was quite pertinent. McMullen rasped out with some asperity, "The honorable gentleman, as everybody knows, has rooms to let in his upper story." Up jumped Davin. "True," said he. "I have rooms to rent, but mine differ from the honorable gentleman's. Mine are furnished."—Argonaut.

Switzerland and Luxury.

Holiday makers will be interested, whether they are pleased or not, to learn that even Switzerland is being affected by the modern craving for luxury. Everywhere on the heights as in the valleys the simple inn is giving place to the grand hotel, in which the men dress for dinner and the ladies change their toilets several times a day. It is disconcerting to those who repair to the mountains in the hope of living the simple life there.—London Daily Graphic.

Amateur Scientists.

Very the routine of daily labor by cultivating a scientific hobby is the advice of Professor S. P. Thompson, who reminds us that much of the world's scientific work has been done by amateurs. For instance, William Herschel, the astronomer, was a music teacher; William Gilbert, author of De Magnete, was a medical man; Dr. W. H. Dallinger, authority on the microscope, was a clergyman, and William Sturgeon, inventor of the electromagnet, was a shoemaker.

500,000 Shares. Par Value, $5.00 Per Share

State of Chihuahua, Mexico

FIRST PUBLIC OFFERING OF STOCK

The attention of investors in mining securities is called to this excellent opportunity of securing a mining stock which has stood the most thorough investigation and endorsement of mining engineers. The Republica Mine is located in the territory of the in the western part of the State of Chihuahua, which section, all well known mining experts concede, is the most richly mineralized country in the Republic of Mexico.

The United States & Mexican Trust Company, which is also financing the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway, offers a small block of this stock at a low price and on easy terms, ensuring a conservative and profitable investment.

THE MINE

The property of the Republica Mining Company is not a prospect, but a developed mine in active operation. It was discovered two and one-half years ago and is already well and favorably known throughout the State of Chihuahua. The development work in the mine has exposed a rich, continuous ore body, and already over 30,000 tons of ore have been opened up, assaying 94 ounces silver per ton, with a gross value of over $1,900,000. There is now on the dump 3,000 tons of ore mined and ready to mill, worth $210,000, and the earnings of the property will be very large as soon as the mill is in full operation.

The mine has been worked to a depth of 205 feet; the richest ore in the property is in the lowest level and there is every reason to believe that the values will increase as a lower depth on the vein is reached.

THE MILL A mill with a capacity of 1000 tons of ore per month is now in course of erection and will soon be in operation. Shipments of ore to the El Paso Smelting Works have already been made amounting to over $17,000.00 net.

Your special attention is called to the fact that this is a developed mine with a large tonnage of high grade ore in reserve. From the mill, which is partly completed, a five-day preliminary run produced five tons of concentrates with an average value of $800.00, U. S. Currency per ton. It is estimated that less than 30 per cent of the silver will be obtained as a concentrate, and the remainder will be extracted by the cyanide process. This portion of the mill is still under construction.

The United States and Mexican Trust Company offers a limited number of shares of stock in the Republica mine at $3.25 per share, (par value $5.00), and recommends it as offering investors a most excellent opportunity.

The price of this stock will be advanced to par as the mill approaches completion.

ARE 30,000 MORE JAPANESE COMING?

Officers of Ocean Liner Said That Numbers Were Seeking Passports to This Country--Why Send an Agent to Japan

Ottawa, Sept. 27.—The Dominion government is understood to be considering the advisability of appointing a special commissioner to visit Japan and China, and possibly Hawaii as well, for the purpose of investigating the immigration of Japanese and Chinese into Canada, and possibly to assist in the conclusion of an understanding that would limit the influx of Asiatic coolies into this country. At the present time Mr. W. D. Scott, chief superintendent of immigration, is on the Pacific coast to investigate on the spot the movement of Oriental population into British Columbia and to report to Ottawa the results of his observations Mr. Scott is vested with full authority also to deport all such of the newcomers, Japanese, Chinese, and Hindoos, as are liable to become a charge on the country at large. At the present time negotiations are in progress between Ottawa and Tokio, having for their object the limitation of the Japanese immigration into Canada to five or six hundred per year, but negotiations over such a great distance are liable to delays that the presence of a Canadian representative to Tokio might obviate. Moreover, this whole movement of Oriental population into Canada has been shrouded from first to last in such mystery that it is as well that we should understand whence its inspiration was drawn and what are the agencies that are now pouring Hindoos, Chinese, and Japs into the country in such unprecedently large numbers.

It has been stated, on the one hand, that no more large parties are coming, and that ex-Senator Chillingworth of Honolulu, who was responsible for the invasion, found the thing a losing game from the financial point of view; that, instead of going at once to the railway construction work in the States for which they were intended, the Japs he sent across scattered in all directions, so that the employment agent was unable to collect his commissions. The story goes, too, that many of the Japs, who were provided with $25 cash each to show that they were not paupers, have neglected to turn over this money on landing, and that the employment agencies are out of pocket this money besides.

On the other hand, it was stated by one of the officers of the last liner that reached Vancouver from the Orient that 30,000 more Japanese have taken out passports to come to this country, and will cross to British Columbia just as quickly as boats can be found to carry them. Investigation would show what ground there is for these conflicting reports.

It is probable that an announcement will be made of the government's intentions in these matters in a few days. In the meantime the whole problem of Asiatic immigration is still engaging the consideration of the ministry.

Lakefield Should Have Representative in the Commons

That bright little sheet, so ably edited, the Lakefield News, says that the East Riding of Peterborough at the next nomination for the House of Commons should have a candidate from that village. The article in question goes on to say that, for many years, Norwood and eastern and southern part of the riding have produced the candidates. At present Mr. Finlay, of Norwood, is the representative, and for many years, previous to his election, Mr. Laing of Otonabee sat in the House as our representative in the case. Lakefield has many splendid men on both sides of politics, eminently qualified to worthily represent the east. As it appears probable that Mr. Finlay will again run in the Liberal interests, the News strongly advocates the selection of a Conservative from this part to contest the seat. Lakefield deserves to have a candidate.

Tells How to Mix It

A well known authority on Rheumatism, gives the following valuable, yet simple and harmless, prescription, which any one can easily prepare at home:

Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being of vegetable combination, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so-called Rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time.

Inspected King Edward School

Inspector Geo. Ball has made a test of the sanitary accommodations of the new King Edward school. Mr. Ball gave a prolongued and thorough test of the waters and other equipments of the school and found them satisfactory in every detail. It will be remembered that some trouble was found with the sewer to which this educational institutions was connected, but Mr. Ball, found on testing that the sanitary attachments were in first-class conditions.

Good Progress by Peterboro Diocese

The Lindsay Post devotes two columns to the 'Growth of the Peterborough Diocese.' The article in question notes that the quarter century since the installation of Peterborough's first bishop has been marked here by a rapidly increasing membership in the Roman Catholic church. In 1882, Bishop Jamot had under his care 30,000 souls; he was assisted by 25 priests, and had only 47 churches. The result of his continued labors during the past 25 years is that the population of the lay members of the diocese is 59,200, attending 117 churches, and in charge of 71 priests.

American Capitalists in the City

American capitalists in city.

On Tuesday some Buffalo, N.Y., and other capitalists were in the city and it is alleged were en route to the mine of the Big Dipper Mining and Milling Co., of Frontenac Co. They will inspect the claims and their possibilities of ore production and are prospective buyers of stock in the new mill to be purchased by the company. Prominent among the party were Messrs. Ball, Kennedy, Staub, Kanuff, Hepp and other prominent American mining and business men. The trip was arranged by Mr. Charles Stoddard, one of the Big Dipper's agents at Buffalo, N. Y.

Harvest Festival at St. John's Church

Rev. Canon Welsh, of Toronto, the Special Preacher--Full Choral Choir

The harvest festival at St. John's church last night was fully choral, and of a bright and cheerful nature as becoming the occasion. The sacred edifice was profusely and prettily decorated with fruits, vegetables, cereals and flowers, and presented a very attractive appearance indeed.

The Rev. Canon Welsh, of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto, preached a very appropriate, and thoughtful sermon. Rev. Canon Davidson the rector of St. John's, was also assisted by Rev. Dr. Langfeldt of St. Luke's, and Rev. Wm. Major of All Saints' church.

The choir was strong and rendered the following musical numbers in a very acceptable manner;

Tallis Festal Responses Proper Psalms, 65, 150, to Chants 23, 2; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis to Cathedral Psalter Chants 171, 87.

Hymns, 381, 362, 386, 367.

Harvest anthem, "While the earth Remaineth,' Simper.

The festival service will be repeated on Sunday evening.

Dominion Tool Co. Meeting

The Dominion Tool Company's directors met in the law offices of Messrs. O'Connell & Gordon on Wednesday night, when arrangements were concluded to secure the machinery necessary to make the goods specified in the company's charter. It has been practically decided to secure and purchase the property wanted for the company. A stockholders' meeting will be held soon.

Sanitary Inspector Ball Busy

Yesterday that hard working and indefatiguable official, Sanitary Inspector Geo. Ball investigated the circumstances and surroundings of a Water street family, who were accused of keeping their premises in an unsanitary condition. Mr. Ball noted afterwards that the place in question was untidy rather than unsanitary. It appears that the residents of the flat, a man and his wife are not inclined any too much to sobriety. Mr. Ball gave them some good advice regarding their behavior but will not molest them in the future provided they conduct themselves properly.

Police Court

Only one case was tried at yesterday's session of the police court, viz. that of Alf. Choate, a just-over Englishman, who after being before the beak on Monday for being drunk was up once more on the same charge City Treasurer Frank Adams held the scales of Justice and handed out a $2 fine to Alfred with the option of ten days in Castle Negbite. As Alfred's cash assets only realized ten cents, he went up on the hill. He had the police telephone to an acquaintance to ask if he could borrow the necessary twin simoleons, but the friend thought Alf would be better in jail, so he would have a chance to sober up.

It might be noted that representatives of the three daily papers of Peterborough, were in the police station before the court opened. This trio of newspapermen decided that as only one lonely drunk was to be tried, it was hardly worth while going upstairs to the court room. The session of the court only took about five minutes. When P. C. Meharry brought Mr. Choate down stairs preparatory to taking him up to Victoria Park's back annex, the reporters asked him, "Say, Meharry what did the Magistrate do with that drunk?' Meharry, with a look that might well have been photographed, answered, "Say, what's the matter with you newspaper men? Are you getting so blamed lazy you expect us to cart down the news to you.' The newsgatherers wilted.

A special session of the police court was held yesterday afternoon when a local citizen, who was charged last Monday with having been drunk in a public place was up for trial. The citizen, who was tried, by Acting Magistrate S. R. Armstrong, remarked, 'Well your worship I guess I was drunk all right enough, but my wife has a tongue in her head that beats all. She would drive anyone crazy.' he was let go.

Doc. Johnston's Mare Wins 2.20 Class

Every man in Peterborough who claims intimate acquaintance with the doings of the horse, that is the horse with a record is well posted on the fact that Dr. Johnston, the local vet., is not only acquainted with the probable winners, but also owns some swift ones himself. It will interest the doctor's many friends to learn that his speedy mare, Hazel Belle won the 2.20 class at Campbellford, where she won three straight heats. Joe Allen, Simpson, Lindsay, had to give way to the local mare, getting three seconds. Lady Gothard was third. The summary was as follows;

Hazel Belle	1	1	1
Joe Allen	2	2	2
Lady Gothard	3	3	3

Time 2.21 1-4, 2.23 1-2, 2.24 1-2.

The 2.20 class was the feature of the day and there was great applause when Hazel Belle came home a winner, carefully and skillfully piloted by Gillie Kearns.

Mr. W. Stocker Sells Fine Residence

Mr. Walter Stocker the king pin of Ontario billposters has sold his fine brick residence on Gilmours street to Mr. J. P. Zepp, superintendent of the Colonial Weaving Company. This residence is immediately east of the house now occupied by Mr. Stocker. The transfer was handled by the real estate firm of J. T. O'Connell & Co. The house is one of the best in the city and is surrounded by a spacious lawn. It is understood that Mr. Stocker received a handsome figure for the property.

WORDS OF ADVICE

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION" INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP, which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use, millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs neither boosting nor boasting, for if we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present advices is becoming easier almost immediately wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

SIX MEN WHO OWN OVER SIX BILLONS

Have Control of 500 Great Corporations, Including 60 Per Cent. of the Railroads--Men in the Big Oil Trust.

New York, Sept. 27.—The secret figures of Standard Oil's profits wrung from the trust officials in the government's suit to dissolve the illegal monopoly have made the public gasp from the Atlantic to the Pacific. That a corporation with $100,000,000 capital could pile up profits of nearly half a billion dollars in eight years—$490,315,934.68, to be exact—and in the meantime increase its assets by $160,000,000, was never dreamed of outside of Wall street.

According to the trust's own figures, more than $180,000,000 of undivided profits still remain in the treasury at the close of the year 1906. Dividends amounting to more than $80,000,000 were paid out in 1906, and average amount of annual dividends for the past eight years has been nearly $40,000,000.

MEN IN THE OIL TRUST.

Five men with estates the stock of which is voted as those controlling spirits which practically own the Oil Trust, and these five in eight years, from 1899 to 1906, divided among themselves more than $1000,000,000 in dividends. They have the absolute control of the great corporation in their hands. Their names are John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller, Henry H. Rogers, Henry M. Flagler and Charles M. Pratt.

With John D. Rockefeller as leader, because his share in the Oil Trust amounts to more than all of the others combined, these five men, with the addition of one more, James Stillman, William Rockefeller's brother-in-law, have used this colossal engine of wealth to get control of industrial, commercial and financial combinations which have a combined capital of over five billions of dollars.

What this power of wealth and organization means is evident in the every day life of millions of citizens of this republic. The control of 500 great corporations, including 60 per cent. of the railroads, means the fixing of prices of products, manufactured and natural, the entire output of which is controlled by this group of six men.

JOHN D. NEVER SPECULATES.

John D. Rockefeller owns more business blocks, improved and unimproved real estate and mortgages on property in Cleveland than any other man or corporation in the Forest City. He is constantly increasing his holdings and mortgages. Mr. Rockefeller, through his commanding position as the head of the Standard Oil Company, which paid a dividend of $15,000,000 as long as ten years ago, while it was "in liquidation" in Ohio, and which has averaged dividends of $40,000,000 annually for the last eight years, has investments of which no one man knows the full list. All of them pay.

The oil king never speculates. When he puts his money into an industry or an enterprise, it is what the sporting fraternity call a "sure thing." By sheer weight of the capital at work and the enormous capital behind it, the "deal" is bound to go through. His gifts and benefactions, enormous as they have been, have never encroached upon his capital, which is piling up every second.

His income from the one investment of oil alone is $21.25 every minutes of the day and night, and the total of his gifts to education and religious institutions is scarcely two-thirds of the golden stream which his Standard Oil trust stock has poured into his coffers in the last quarter of a century.

The Dominion Government Will Rebuild the Quebec Bridge

Ottawa, Sept. 27.—Although the commissioners appointed by the Dominion government to investigate the Quebec bridge disaster have completed the taking of evidence in Quebec itself, the most important part of their work remains to be done—their personal investigation of the plans of the bridge and of the wreck that has occurred on the shore of the St. Lawrence river at Cap Rouge. From this enquiry and a review of the evidence it is hoped that the commission will be able not only to indicate the cause of the disaster, but to indicate what steps should be taken to prevent any recurrence of this national calamity.

Their report will go before parliament at its approaching session, and it is a foregone conclusion that when the bridge is rebuilt it will not be by any private company, as was before, but by the Dominion of Canada as a link in the new trans-continental system.

Need Steam?

Get It From Selected Food

It is good to know the kind of food those with weak stomachs and hearts can get along with for when a man or woman is a little below par, an easily digested food is the thing that goes right to the spot.

A man in Kirksville, Mo., tells how he got out of trouble by using Grape-Nuts food. He says, "My trouble was intense suffering in the stomach. It was called gastralgia, but no medicine gave any permanent relief.

"In June of last year I began to grow much worse in every respect. I was terribly constipated and the stomach pains were severe. I ran low until I weighed only 126 pounds. I had to give up my business for my nerves were completely unstrung and I could not sleep more than two or three hours during the night and that only by snatches during a lull in the pain.

"I tried almost every kind of food, but finally was put on Grape-Nuts and in a little while it began to make its worth known. I began to sleep better nights, my strength gradually came back, and I gained in weight rapidly until a little while ago I weighed 165 pounds and have been a well man for months with never a touch of the old trouble.

"My bowels are perfect, the nervous trouble has gone. You can realize I appreciate the value of Grape Nuts food."

This is another evidence of the practical worth of Grape-Nuts food in cases of weak stomach and poor digestion. It is the most scientifically made food in existence and contains absolutely nothing but selected parts of the field grains, so cooked and prepared as to admit of almost immediate digestion and assimilation, carrying with it the elements furnished by Mother Nature for rebuilding the nervous system, the gray matter in the brain and the solar plexus.

When one gets from food what the body needs, it is easy to get well and keep well. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

"Ferrozone braced me up at once. It gave me strength and spirits, brought back my nerve and cheerfulness. From my experience with Ferrozone I recommend it to all expectant mothers."

UNION LABEL

PETERBOROUGH, SEPTEMBER 28 1907.

SLAVERY UNDER BRITISH FLAG.

Alfred N. Tucker, Bishop of Uganda, Writes in The London Spectator.

I have recently passed through the Town of Mombasa, on the coast of British East Africa, and there over the court-house the Union Jack flies. In that courthouse a judge sits—an Englishman—who receives his commission from His Majesty the King. He is, moreover, paid by the British House of Commons. The depositions are taken down on paper embossed with the royal arms, and the processes of the court are issued in the name of His Majesty.

An Arab or Swahili drags a wretched slave-woman before this court. "This woman is my property," he pleads. She denies it. The case is gone into. The decision of the judge is given, and the claim of this man to this woman as his chattel is acknowledged, and she is dragged away to continue under the aegis of the Union Jack her miserable existence of servitude.

This affair is no fanciful picture. Several years ago I contested for a fortnight a case on behalf of a slave in this very Town of Mombasa, and in the circumstances which I have described. Happily, I was able to obtain the freedom of the woman for whom I was pleading by proving that she had been illegally purchased in the first instance. But for slaves not acquired in contravention of the decrees of the Sultan of Zanzibar there is absolutely no remedy.

The Union Jack may fly as proudly as it pleases over the court house; the slave may fall down as in the melodrama and cry: "Here at least I am safe!" but it will all be in vain.

Pirates Secure £5,000.

There is quite an old-time flavor about a tale which comes from Odessa.

At 11 o'clock on a recent Sunday night the steamer Sophia was about sixteen miles from Odessa on a voyage to Korthion. The captain and passengers were having supper on deck when suddenly three young men appeared, and, covering the party with revolvers, held them in check while two others seized the man at the wheel and ordered him, under threat of death, to set the ship's course for Odessa.

Some of the pirates, who numbered 18, then went into the first-class saloon, where they took possession of an iron cash-box containing £5,000, which was in charge of a cashier of the Russian Bank for Foreign Trade. They also took £100 belonging to the passengers.

Then they disabled the engines, let off the steam, and finally made their escape in two of the Sophia's boats, after destroying the third.

Dublin Cathedral Damaged.

A huge half ton weight which supplied the motive power to the bells from the tower sixty feet high, crashed through the arches of Christ Church Cathedral recently after the church had been closed. The immense weight fell into the choir gallery. It has been decided to suspend services until the extent of the damage has been ascertained.

It was in Christ Church Cathedral, which was erected in the eleventh century, that the litury was first read in Ireland in the English language. In 1553 mass was again celebrated in the church and continued for six years, under the order of Queen Mary. Then the Episcopal service took its place.

ART OF SWEEPING.

There Is a Wrong Way and There's a Right Way to Do This Work.

Every one does not know how to sweep a room. It requires skill, combined with patience, to clean a room properly. The chief mistake made by a novice is to think she can hurry through it and to think the room will be clean if she takes long, heavy strokes with her broom. Short, light strokes which are firm will do the work as it should be done. It is always best to sweep a heavy brussels carpet or one of similar make once with the grain, then once across it, going over each three or four yards in this way until the entire carpet is swept. When a carpet is old and evenly worn this is hardly necessary, but if it is new or has any perceptible ridges this method should surely be followed. After going over a room thoroughly allow the dust to settle, and in ten or fifteen minutes give it a final brushing, sweeping it lightly, and nothing is more satisfactory than a sweeper or dampened broom.

Tea leaves scattered over the carpet are good. They should be squeezed as dry as possible and sprinkled over the carpet before the final sweep.

Another good plan is to sprinkle the floor before starting to sweep with dry table salt. The salt seems to brighten the colors of a faded carpet as well as to aid in removing dust. When the second sweeping is over use a whisk broom in the corners and around the edges. After the walls are dusted and the carpet clean it is well to wipe off the surface of the carpet with a cloth dipped in salt and water which has been wrung out as dry as possible. This will remove every trace of dust. The cloth used for the purpose must be frequently rinsed in fresh water and then dipped into the salted water again and wrung out as before. Then, some folks like to go over the carpet with ammonia water, but I prefer the salt, as salt keeps out moths.

It is needless to say that in sweeping as thoroughly as this every article which is movable should be removed first or dusted and carefully covered with old sheets. When buying heavy pieces of furniture be careful to select those that have good, easily moved casters, so the articles may be pushed about, and the dust be kept from behind and from underneath them.

It is a great mistake to neglect sweeping as thoroughly as this every two weeks. If you do, the dust becomes ground into a carpet and helps it to wear out. Besides, dust discolors it more than or quite as much as wear. Fortunately many houses of today are built with hardwood floors, so the burden of sweeping is greatly lessened, as rugs are lifted, shaken or beaten out of doors. Hardwood floors, if swept with a hair brush instead of a broom, then rubbed with a little oil or simply polished with a waxing brush, can be kept in good condition with comparatively little labor.

HINTS FOR THE HAIR.

When there is dryness of the scalp the application of warm olive oil to the head prior to washing is recommended. If possible this should be done twenty-four hours before the hair is shampooed, the oil being both rubbed into the scalp and also allowed to saturate the roots. This has the effect of strengthening it, and in the case of weak and falling hair it will do much to prevent the distressing loss which is so often the effect of shampooing.

The yolk of an egg as a hair wash is an old and tried specific, but many women nowadays believe in adding to it the juice of a lemon, while as many as six or seven yolks are sometimes employed for one shampoo, so as to permit of three or four applications, thus insuring a perfect cleansing. An excellent method of obviating any subsequent stickiness is to add a teaspoonful of cream of tartar to the final rinsing water.

In the case of very fair hair the whites of the eggs are always better than the yolks, which tend to darken it, and these should be used with a little soft soap.

Nothing is simpler or more easily managed than a soft soap made of castile or palm oil. Take a cake of either and cut into small bits. Put into a china basin and add a few tablespoonfuls of hot water. Set the basin in a pan of boiling water and let this stay on the stove until the soap is melted. Sometimes it is necessary to add a little more water to the bits, and one need not be afraid of getting in too much. One cake may easily make a pint of liquid. When the soap has arrived at this condition put it into a wide mouthed glass jar and set away in a cool place. When cool it will be like a jelly.

To Mend Gauze Hose.

In mending stockings use four ply cotton, but with three different sizes of needles. One fine needle is threaded with a single strand of black cotton and is used for the small holes in the thin gauze or lisle thread stockings. This tears the fabric much less than the ordinary large eye darning needle. A second rather large size is used for the larger holes with two strands of the cotton, where the single thread would take too long and not fill in strongly enough.

Useful to Know.

Palpitation of the heart may often be arrested by bending down so as to allow the blood to run to the head.

Do not start hollyhocks in the conservatory. They are hardy and do not like artificial heat.

Poached eggs may be kept from spreading in the pan while cooking by putting a few drops of vinegar in the water.

His Recreation.

Sir Henry Taylor used to relate how on one occasion he went to see Lord Hammond, then the under secretary for foreign affairs, of whom it used to be said that he was never absent from his post. On this day, however, he happened to be away, and when the doorkeeper was questioned on the subject he said, "His lordship has gone to a funeral, sir, and it's the only day's pleasure he's had for two years."

WILL DO SPLENDID WORK

SIR ELDON GORST A WORTHY SUCCESSOR TO LORD CROMER.

Appointment as British Agent in Egypt Everywhere Approved—Trained by His Predecessor In Office—Right Man In the Right Place—Had Brilliant Career at Cambridge—Financial Genius.

The appointment of Sir Eldon Gorst as British Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, in succession to Lord Cromer, has everywhere been received with a chorus of approval, the general opinion being that the choice is the very best that could possibly have been made.

Sir Eldon is the son of the Rt. Hon. Sir John Gorst, and was born in New Zealand in 1861. He had a brilliant career at Cambridge, was 20 years in Egypt, was specially trained by Lord Cromer as a financier and administrator, was connected as British adviser with the most important departments of the Khedive's Government, assisted in negotiating the agreement between Great Britain and France, and completed his apprenticeship by three years' service in the Foreign Office as Under Secretary.

His eminent ability, firmness, experience and popularity in Egypt are frankly acknowledged, but he is described by censorious critics as a financier of the Milner type, who has been brought under the personal influence of his father-in-law, Mr. C. D. Rudd, one of Cecil Rhodes' working allies in South Africa. Lord Milner proved himself one of the most capable and original financiers in the civil service while he was in Egypt and in Somerset House, and his administrative work after the Boer war was so brilliant and so thorough that the ground was effectively cleared for the establishment of the Transvaal Government.

Has Every Possible Qualification.

If Sir Eldon Gorst, after being trained in the same school, has genius for finance and administration like Lord Milner's, the Khedive and his subjects are to be congratulated, and it is hardly credible that he has been incapacitated for broadminded service in Egypt by marrying the daughter of one of Mr. Rhodes' business associates. The black specks begin to dance before the eyes of Boer sympathizers whenever the names of Milner and Rhodes are mentioned.

Sir Eldon Gorst has every possible qualification for his new post, even to a thorough knowledge of Arabic, which he speaks fluently, and he will not be in hot haste to take up the political development of the country prematurely and to carry out nationalist ideals and representative institutions before the country is prepared for them.

Succeeding a Great Man.

There is no doubt that the close of a career like Lord Cromer's is a national much more than a personal event. Lord Cromer's half-century of public work includes thirty years of Egyptian service—and Egypt has not been ruled by so famous a ruler as he has proved himself since the time of Joseph. A signal fact about his career in Egypt is its level character; there has been little, if any, sensation about it. Lord Cromer strikes us as quite singular in discretion, sagacity; this, combined with a swift strength at critical times, makes indeed a notable man.

Britain's Shipbuilding.

While we admit the wickedness of feeling proud of our immense superiority in the production of merchant shipping, candor compels the acknowledgment that the sin is in us. Pharisees may say what they like on that head, but the average man must have chuckled with satisfaction the other day when he learned that whereas the British Isles launched 2,009,571 tons last year, the total output of all foreign countries was limited to 1,322,454 tons. Apart from patriotism there is solid reason for every true-born Briton to shout from the housetops at this gratifying proof of our shipbuilders' alertness and enterprise. There could be no clearer demonstration of the capacity of the United Kingdom to eclipse any and all foreign nations in the construction of war vessels also, whether of one type or another. And we happily enjoy the same superiority in regard to both cheapness and speed—a superiority which in the case of any great maritime war, would be bound to tell immensely in favor of white-cliffed Albion. So let us repent, in sackcloth and ashes, for our unpardonable naughtiness, while at the same time doing all in our power to render it hopeless for the foreigner to enter into rivalry.

To check a cold quickly, get from our druggist some little Candy Cold Tablets called Preventics. Druggists everywhere are now dispensing Preventics, for they are not only safe, but decidedly certain and prompt. Preventics contain no quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh nor sickening. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will prevent pneumonia, bronchitis, la grippe, etc. Remember the name Preventics. Good for feverish children. 25 Preventics 25 cents. Trial mass 5 cents. Sold by all dealers.

Killed on the Track.

Quebec, Sept. 26.—As the passengers have been taken from the Mongolian to the Hurona it is to be assumed that the latter vessel has suffered the lesser damage of the two.

As they are both traveling at the rate of eight knots an hour it is calculated they will arrive at Grosse Isle, which will be their first stopping place, about two or three o'clock this morning, and after a short delay there they will proceed to Quebec, and are expected here about seven or eight o'clock. Arrangements are being made for them to go into dock.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2000 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 50 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

"Why, Agnes, I beg your pardon, Mrs Remington, when did you come?" he asked, offering his hand to the lady, who, coquettishly shaking back from her pretty, dollish face a profusion of light brown curls, gave him the tips of her lavender kids, while she told him she had come to Aikenside the Saturday before; and hearing from Guy that the lady with whom he boarded was an old friend of hers, she had driven over to call, and brought Jessie with her. "Here, Jessie, speak to the doctor. He was poor dear papa's friend," and a very proper sigh escaped Agnes Remington's lips as she pushed a little curly-haired girl toward Dr. Holbrook.

The lady of the house had spied them by this time, and came running down the walk to meet her rather distinguished visitor, wondering, it may be, to what she was indebted for this call from one who, since her marriage with the supposedly wealthy Dr. Remington, had rather cut her former acquaintances. Agnes was delighted to see her, and, as Guy declined entering the cottage just then, the two friends disappeared within the door, while the doctor and Guy repaired to the office, the latter sitting down in the very chair intended for Madeline Clyde. This reminded the doctor of his perplexity, and also brought the comforting thought that Guy, who had never failed him yet, could surely offer some suggestions. But he would not speak of her just now; he had other matters to talk about, and so, jamming his penknife into a pine table covered with similar jams, he said: "Agnes, is seems, has come to Aikenside, notwithstanding she declared she never would, when she found that the whole of the Remington property belonged to your mother, and not your father."

"Oh, yes; She got over her pique as soon as I settled a handsome little income on Jessie, and, in fact, on her too, until she is foolish enough to marry again, when it will cease, of course, as I do not feel it my duty to support any man's wife, unless it be my own, or my father's," was Guy Remington's reply; whereupon the penknife went again into the table, and this time with so much force that the point was broken off; but the doctor did not mind it, and with the jagged end continued to make jagged marks, while he continued. "She'll hardly marry again, though she may. She's young—not over twenty-six——"

"Twenty-eight, if the family Bible does not lie; but she'd never forgive me if she knew I told you that. So let it pass that she's twenty-six. She certainly is not more than three years your senior, a mere nothing, if you wish to make her Mrs. Holbrook," and Guy's dark eyes scanned curiously the doctor's face, as if seeking there for the secret of his proud young stepmother's anxiety to visit plain Mrs. Conner that afternoon. But the doctor only laughed merrily at the idea of his being father to Guy, his college chum and long-tried friend.

Agnes Remington — reclining languidly in Mrs. Conner's easy-chair, and overwhelming her former friend with descriptions of the gay parties she had attended in Boston, and the fine sights she saw in Europe, whither her gray-haired husband had taken her for a wedding tour—would not have felt particularly flattered could she have seen that smile, or heard how easily, from talking of her, Dr. Holbrook turned to another theme, to Madeline Clyde, expected now almost every moment. There was a merry laugh on Guy's part, as he listened to the doctor's story, and, when it was finished, he said: "Why, I see nothing so very distasteful in examining a pretty girl, and pussling her, to see her blush. I half wish I were in your place. I should enjoy the novelty of the thing."

"Oh, take it, then; take my place, Guy," the doctor exclaimed, eagerly. "She does not know me from Adam. Here are books, all you will need. You went to a district school once a week when you were staying in the country. You surely have some idea, while I have not the slightest. Will you, Guy?" he persisted more earnestly, as he heard wheels in the street, and was sure old Sorrel had come again.

Guy Remington liked anything savoring of a frolic, but in his mind there were certain conscientious scruples touching the justice of the thing, and so at first he demurred, while the doctor still insisted, until at last he laughingly consented to commence the examination, provided the doctor would sit by and occasionally come to his aid.

"You must write the certificate, of course," he said, 'testifying that she is qualified to teach."

"Yes, certainly, Guy, if she is; but maybe she won't be, and my orders are to be strict."

"How did she look?" Guy asked, and the doctor replied "Saw nothing but her bonnet. Came in a queer old go-giggle of a wagon, such as your country farmers drive. Guess she won't be likely to stir up the bile of either of us, particularly as I am bullet-proof, and you have been engaged for years. By the way, when do you cross the sea again for the fair Lassy? Rumor says this summer."

"Rumor is wrong, as usual, then," was Guy's reply, a soft light stealing into his handsome eyes. Then, after a moment, he added: "Miss Atherstone's health is far too delicate for her to incur the risks of a climate like ours. If she were well acclimated, I should be glad, for it is terribly lonely up at Aikenside."

"And do you really think a wife would make it pleasanter?" Dr. Holbrook asked, the tone of his voice indicating a little doubt as to a man's being happier for having a helpmate to share his joys and sorrows.

But no such doubts dwelt in the mind of Guy Remington. Eminently fitted for domestic happiness, he looked forward anxiously to the time when sweet Lucy Atherstone, the fair English girl to whom he had become engaged when, four years before, he visited Europe, should be strong enough to bear transplanting to American soil. Twice since his engagement he had visited her, finding her always lovely, gentle, and yielding. Too yielding, it sometimes seemed to him while occasionally the thought has flashed upon him that she did not possess a very remarkable depth of intellect. But he said to himself, he did not care; he hated strong-minded women, and would far rather his wife should be a little weak than masculine, like his Aunt Margaret, who sometimes wore bloomers, and advocated women's rights. Yes, he greatly preferred Lucy Atherstone, as she was, to a wife like the stately Margaret, or like Agnes, his pretty stepmother, who only thought how she could best attract attention; and as it had never occurred to him that there might be a happy medium, that a woman need not be brainless to be feminine and gentle, he was satisfied with his choice, as well he might be, for a fairer, sweeter flower never bloomed than Lucy Atherstone, his affianced bride. Guy loved to think of Lucy, and as the doctor's remarks brought her to his mind, he went off into a reverie concerning her, becoming so lost in thought that until the doctor's hand was laid upon his shoulder by way of rousing him, he did not see that what his friend had designated as a go-giggle was stopping in front of the office, and that from it a young girl was alighting.

Naturally very polite to females, Guy's first impulse was to go to her assistance, but she did not need it, as was proven by the light spring with which she reached the ground. The white-haired man was with her again, but he evidently did not intend to stop and a close observer might have detected a shade of sadness and anxiety upon his face as Madeline called cheerily out to him: "Good-by, grandpa. Don't fear for me; I hope you will have good luck." Then, as he drove away, she ran a step after him and said: "Don't look so sorry, for if Mr. Remington won't let you have the money, there's my pony, Beauty. I am willing to give him up."

"Never, Maddy. It's all the little fortin' you've got. I'll let the old place go first"; and, chirruping to Sorrel, the old man drove on, while Madeline walked, with a beating heart, to the office door, knocking timidly.

Glancing involuntarily at each other, the young men exchanged smiles, while the doctor whispered softly: "Verdant—that's sure. Wonder if she'd knock at a church."

ing, the food cooked in it.

Fat may be used again and again, but it must be clarified afresh after each using. A slice of raw potato placed in it will clear it, and it must still be strained through a cloth into a basin again. When it becomes much discolored by frequent use it should be melted, then mixed with water and carbonate of soda (half a teaspoonful to one quart of water) and boiled for half an hour, skimming thoroughly and setting aside till cold. Then cut up, scraping off all impurities, and clarify as before with water, boiling until all has evaporated, when clear fat will remain to be strained off.

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the stomach, etc.

A weak stomach causing dyspepsia, a weak heart with palpitation or intermittent pulse, always means weak stomach nerves or weak heart nerves. Strengthen these inside or controlling nerves with Dr Shoop's Restorative and see how quickly these ailments disappear. Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis., will mail samples free. Write for them. A test will tell. Your health is certainly worth this.

Little Pitchers.

Tommy—Why, Mr. Smith, you didn't go in the ocean steamer after all, did you?

Guest—What makes you ask that, Tommy? I had no idea of going in the steamer.

Tommy—Well, all the same, mamma said, when papa told her he had asked you to dinner, why did he do that, because she was sure you would be half seas over.—Baltimore American.

Diplomatic Reticence.

The social reformer was paying a visit to the convicts in the penitentiary and asking them various questions.

"And what are you doing here, my friend?" he said to a good looking man in the shoeshop.

"Making shoes," was the reply that discouraged any further inquisition in that direction.

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain in congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—creates blood pressure away from pain centers. Intelligent is charming, pleasingly delightful dentry, to such safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.

If it's painful periods with women, same cause.

If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty for Dr Shoop's Headache Tablets stop pain promptly and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red and swell and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

The Smelting of Ore is the safest and most profitable business in the world.

We have fifteen mining properties, located in Kern County, California, carrying good values in Gold, Silver and Copper.

The smelter nearest to us is at Needles, 250 miles distant.

We propose to install on our properties a smelter to treat the ores from our own mines and to do custom smelting for others.

50 per cent. per annum is a moderate estimate of the profits we can earn. If you want to make a safe and profitable investment send for full information and investigate our proposition.

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 fifty-acre claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty fifty-acre claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing hole claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and cut by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt, rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Burglar's at Burnham's Point

Burglars broke into the Peterborough Lumber Company's office, Burnham's Point on Tuesday night. Fortunately the midnight mechanics did not get much reward for their labor.

Written offers for 583 Water St., addressed to P.O. Box 201, Peterborough, will be received by Mr. J. H. Burnham, up to Saturday next, 28th instant. The house will be open for inspection during the interval.

Lunge are Being Sold Cheap

The Hastings Star says that Rice Lake Indians are offering lunge for sale at 3c per lb. This is pretty cheap for a good game fish and it looks like a cheap way to kill out a good fishing ground by exterminating the lunge. Looks very much as though nets were being used.

New Floor on Market Scales

Yesterday morning farmers bringing in loads of hay, hogs and other agricultural products as well as coal dealers had to take their stuff to the various weigh scales competing with the larger city platform scales to get their weights determined, as the planking on the market scales was torn up and only an open hole visible where the platform scale is usually in evidence. Mr. Irwin was in charge of the laying of the new floor and hustled the job through as quick as possible.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

Turpentine.

Turpentine is distilled from the sap of pine trees. Russian turpentine is not used in making paint because it does not dry properly.

Diamonds.

The diamond, notwithstanding the fact that it is the hardest substance known, is exceedingly brittle and therefore easily broken. Diamonds are not "cut" in the true sense of the word. They are first cleft along the line of cleavage and then "cut" by rubbing two diamonds together—"diamond cut diamond"—until they are of the desired form.

Soot.

It is because soot contains 4 per cent of ammonium sulphate that it is useful as manure.

Army Rifles.

The rifle was introduced into the British service about the beginning of the last century. It was of such primitive make that mallets were served out with each rifle to ram the bullets home.

Gunpowder.

There is no standard gunpowder. Every nation seems to have its own formula.

The Honey Record.

The average amount of honey taken from an English hive is fifty pounds, double the American average. The record "take" from any hive was 1,000 pounds from a stock of Cyprians.

Maine's First Sermon.

The first sermon in Maine was delivered at Monhegan Aug. 9, 1607.

Cuban Customs.

In Cuba a bereaved family keeps the windows of its house shut and darkened for six months. It destroys the value of the clothing on the dead and backs the coffin before burial. This is done that there may be nothing in the grave worth thieving.

A Famous Old Church.

The Pilgrim Congregational church, near London, founded in 1616, is the oldest of the denomination in the empire, and it was from it that the London contingent of the men of the Mayflower was recruited.

Cotton Bandages.

Cotton serves as a better bandage than linen for the reason that the linen more readily absorbs the albuminous serum in burns and skin diseases of a moist character, thus keeping the surface dry and causing pain. It also absorbs the fatty substances used in dressing, and thus prevents their action on the skin.

Rhymeless.

You cannot find a word to rhyme with "echo" or "month."

Sowing Fine Seed.

An excellent method of sowing fine seed is to mix it with either coarse sand or cornmeal. In this way the seed becomes well scattered upon the soil, and when the plants spring up they are nicely separated and, if transplanted, more easily removed.

German Canaries.

The breeding and selling of canary birds in Germany have reached such proportions that it now controls the markets of the world.

Blushing.

A blush is usually thought of as affecting only the face, but it often covers the neck and sometimes spreads along the shoulder blades. In fact, some people blush all over their bodies.

Largest Chemical Works.

The chemical works at Northwich, in Cheshire, England, are the largest of the kind in the world.

The Chaffinch.

The chaffinch is a favorite bird in Germany. It is beautiful and a fine singer. Its various colors are gray or deep blue on the neck, a reddish brown on the breast, white on the wing-coverts and bluish black on the tail.

Nightmare.

A very small dose of bicarbonate of soda taken after supper acts as an almost certain preventive of nightmare.

Shark Livers.

The livers of sharks produce a splendid clear oil that is very valuable and in great demand for the lubrication of the works of watches, clocks and of fine guns. This oil is held in almost as great estimation as is the oil obtained from the porpoise and dogfish liver, generally conceded to be the finest oil there is.

Ancient Astronomers.

The first astronomical observatory was established at Alexandria 300 years B. C.

Gruesome Cards.

In Peking, China, so runneth the tale, a mandarin of wealth and taste presented a luminary of the stage with a pack of cards made of human skin 400 years old and originally captured from a pirate of the most blood curdling sort.

Smelling Salts.

Smelling salts may be very cheaply made by adding lavender water to the common lump ammonia.

Devils in Petticoats.

The Russians are reported to have said when they first saw the highland regiments, "We thought we had come to fight with men, but find devils in petticoats."

Lobsters.

Lobsters gain in weight half a pound a year.

Tiral Catarrh treatments are being mailed out free, on request, by Dr. Shoop Racine, Wis. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this scientific prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy. Sold by all dealers.

THE NEIGHBORS' CHILDREN.

They Were Regular Outlaws, but There Were Others Apparently.

This is as it occurred at a Third avenue residence, where the lady of the house was entertaining an old friend:

"I was telling Albert yesterday that we're just got to move. I have as much patience as most women, but the conduct of our neighbors' children is more than I can endure. They've never been taught to mind and are regular outlaws. Here, Jimmie, quit that squalling or I'll take a stick to you!"

But her young hopeful refused to obey orders, and she yanked him out of the room in a way that showed his arm well put in. "As I was saying," she continued, "those little hoodlums next door make my life miserable. Hettie, stop tearing that book! Do you suppose that your father has nothing to do but buy books for you children to destroy? Put it on the table."

"I don't have to." And the work of destruction went on.

"I'm afraid the little dear is not feeling well. We'll either move or I'll tell my neighbor very plainly that she'll have to keep her youngsters on their own side of the fence. What under the heavens was that now?' And the two rushed to the dining room. There was Tommy, who had received positive instructions to do his playing upstairs in the nursery, kicking his way out from the tablecloth and dishes, which he had pulled down together, increasing the breakage at every kick and saying improper things with wonderful fluency.

"Is my little darling hurt?' cried the mother as she received a kick on the shoulder while rescuing Tommy. "Bless his little heart. Get out of here and stop this bawling," to the rest of the sympathizing urchins.

The neighbors moved early the next week.—Detroit Free Press.

The Time and the Price.

"Have you some good shoes for boys?" asked the mother over the phone.

"We have a line of very serviceable knockabout shoes, madam," replied the salesman who had responded to the call.

"What are the prices?"

"Four to eight, $1; nine to twelve, $1.25; two to five, $1.50, madam."

"I can't possibly be out shopping at such an outlandish hour as 4 in the morning, but I'll do my best to get there by 7:30, so please save me a pair at a dollar."—Judge.

Easy Selection.

"No," said Derringer Dan decidedly, "we don't never have no hoss races in Crimson Gulch."

"I'm glad," said the elderly visitor, "that you avoid such things."

"Yes, things got to a point where we had to give 'em up. The idea of goin' deliberately to work an' showin' which hoss could keep ahead of the posse got took advantage of, so that last year we lost more stock an' had fewer hangin's than ever before in the history of Crimson Gulch."—Washington Star.

Something in a Name.

"This," said the party with the unbarbered hair as he pulled a manuscript from his pocket, "is a fugitive poem."

"Why do you call it a fugitive poem?" asked his friend.

"Because," explained the versifier, "every time I hand it to an editor I have to run for my life."—Chicago News.

Didn't Look Strong.

While Maggie and her mother were away on their vacation Mr. Newcomb took the opportunity to paint their wood colored house white.

"Don't you like it, Maggie?" asked her father on the little lady's return.

"I would, papa," she replied slowly, "if—if it wasn't so awfully pale."

New Bridge for Asphodel

A special committee of the county council, composed of Warden McNulty, Reeves Breault, Darling, Moher and Porter and Ed. M. Elliott, county clerk, met on Thursday last to inspect the old bridge on the 7th concession of Asphodel. The committee decided to proceed with the construction of a new bridge forthwith. The new bridge will be 85 feet long.

DOCTORS MISTAKES

Are said often to be buried six feet under ground. But many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous prostration, another with pain here and there, and in this way they present alike to themselves and their easy-going or overbusy doctor, separate diseases, for which he, assuming them to be such, prescribes his pills and potions. In reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some uterine disease. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, keeps up his treatment until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, perhaps worse, by the wrong treatment, but probably worse. A proper medicine like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause, would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery. It has been well said, that "a disease known is half cured."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully devised by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate system. It is made of native American medicinal roots and is perfectly harmless in its effects in any conditions of the female system.

As a powerful invigorating tonic "Favorite Prescription" imparts strength to the whole system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," house-keepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the uterus. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. One to three a dose. Easy to take as candy.

20,000 Gallons of Oil Exploded Instantly Killing Three Men

The Men Were Employed to Sprinkle Oil on Race Track in Preparation for an Automobile Race--James Kelly was Hurled 100 Feet Into a Tank

New York, Sept. 28.—Twenty thousand gallons of crude oil stored in a tank in the borough of the Bronx exploded with terrific force while three men were drawing oil from it early today, killing the men almost instantly. The dead are James Cooper, of Unionport; James Reilly, of Westchester; and Richard Smith, of Van Nest, all of which villages are in Westchester county.

Cooper was employed by the officials of the Morris Park race track to sprinkle the track with oil in preparation for an automobile race. Reilly and Smith were his assistants. Early yesterday they went to the tank, which belonged to the Bronx Gas & Electric Light Co., Protectory avenue, and began to fill a sprinkling cart with the oil. Reilly and Smith were sent to the top of the tank, while Cooper remained by the wagon. It is supposed that a lantern carried by one of the men ignited some loose oil under the tank. The explosion which followed tore off the top of the tank, and sent it flying into the yard of the Catholic Protectory nearby, alarming the fifteen boys therein, and shattered many of the windows of the protectory.

Policemen who were nearby found Cooper lying near the blazing tank with his clothes afire. He died in a few minutes. One body, believed to be that of Reilly, was found badly burned in a swamp a hundred feet from the tank, and another, believed to be that of Richard Smith, was found in the tank after it had been flooded with water.

Presbyterian Banquet on Thursday, October 24

The laymen's banquet to be held in connection with and under auspices of the local Presbyterian churches, will be held on Thursday evening, October 24th, in St. Andrew's hall. As has been previously announced, the speaker of the evening will be Rev. J. A. MacDonald, editor of The Toronto Globe, and his subject will be, "The Laymen's Movement in the Church." There will likely be several other speakers, but full arrangements in regard to this part of the program have not yet been made. Committees have been appointed and will complete all details. There will be a musical program to be provided by local talent. The catering will be done by a local caterer and tickets for the banquet will be put on sale at once.

Mr. G. M. Rogers will be chairman of the evening and the banquet promises to be a great success.

Britain Rebuffed at Hague Conference

The Hague, Sept. 27.—Great Britain received a serious rebuff at a private gathering of the delegates to peace conference held here yesterday to discuss the abolition of contraband. The meeting was convoked by Sir Edward Pry, head of the British delegation. Three months ago Great Britain presented a proposition regarding the abolition of contraband in which twenty-five countries expressed their adherence. Yesterday Sir Edward invited the delegates of these twenty-five countries to attend the meeting last night with a view of agreeing on a convention abolishing contraband, adding that the United States had abandoned the principle of conditional contraband.

M. Morey Von Kapos-More, of Austria, objected, saying that the instructions given the delegates referred only to questions to be adopted by the conference unanimously. All the delegates present with the exception of the Haitien representative, opposed Sir Edward Fry, and the British proposition was ultimately rejected

A TIMELY HINT

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION" INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP, which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use, millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs neither boosting nor boasting, for if we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present indications is becoming easier almost immediately wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

Address your enquiries to:
W. M. CAMPBELL, 209 Stair Building, Cor. Bay and Adelaide streets, Toronto, Ont.

Police Court

At yesterday's session of the police court the first case tried was a charge brought by Chief Rozzel against the Ontario Coal Co., charging them with maintaining a sign over the pavement, contrary to the provisions of a city bylaw prohibiting such signs. Mr. Poussette appeared for the defence. It seems that the sign bylaw allows illuminated signs to be placed. Mr. Poussette claimed that as lights inside the window where the sign hangs make the sign in question legible by night, it came under the signs permitted. He claimed moreover that the bylaw itself is ultra vires, as the common law of England has always allowed merchants to advertise their wares.

City Solicitor Hall here took up a copy of the bylaw and said that similar municipal legislation is enforced in Toronto, Hamilton and other places.

The magistrate remarked, "Mr. Poussette don't you think it would be cheaper to make the sign comply with the provisions of the act?" Mr. Poussette said he would have the matter attended to. The magistrate enlarged the case for one week.

At the close of the regular police court yesterday morning, a juvenile court was held, at which the matter of taking the children of Hector Baker, and placing them under the direction of the Children's Aid Society, was considered. Mr. R. F. McWilliams appeared for the Baker family, and Mr. E. L. Goodwill acted on behalf of the society. The children were given back to their parents.

While it was shown that Mr. and Mrs. Baker at times got intoxicated, on the whole they behaved well to the little ones.

His worship gave the parents some good advice and allowed them to have their two children.

The Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Attended by Large Crowd--Many Visitors Here

The Directors Pleased with the Attendance but Look for a Larger Crowd Today--Live Stock Entries Surpasses Those of Past Years--Good Show of Poultry--Midway and Other Special Attractions Very Popular

Fortunately for the Peterborough Fair yesterday, the weather man did not send down either rain or hail. The morning as well as the afternoon was characterized by indeterminate climate. Those sore-heads who gleefully prophisied rainy weather, had to get under cover and admit that the fair of yesterday was fair and beyond that of all previous years.

The Peterborough Exhibition is the best, beyond all contradictable arguments that this city or county has ever had. The exhibits are better than ever, the poultry show, now held under canvas beats all former years, the attractions, apart from the actual exhibits are more than worth any customer's price of admission.

The fair of this year is well worth attendance by the most fastidious exactor. The whole grounds as one enters are covered by the tents, above referred to. Here are chickens, geese, turkeys, rabbits, hares, etc., of all classes, but mainly the best. A full description of the prizes awarded will appear in Monday's paper.

The pipes were the best we have had in many a year, the displays were better than seen in, say, five or six counties, and the toute ensemble of the fair were up to what might be expected in places of ten times the size of Peterborough.

The fair this year is managed by a capable group of officials and every effort has been put forth by them to make this exhibition cap all previous ones and from actual investigation this year's fall fair has and did result in a better patronage, a better display and a more extended showing of what this county, province and city can manufacture and produce than ever seen on the grounds before.

It seems that this year the Peterborough exhibition has revised Horace Greeley's advice, "Go west young man," as the main trend of the exhibits has gone eastward. The grounds as one enters them from the street cars is covered to the gates with tents of all makes and sizes. Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, have a notable exhibit. Conspicuous as one catches sight of their tents and decorations is a huge flag, a Union Jack 40 by 20 feet in size, bearing the inscription, "J. J. Turner & Sons."

During the morning the judges were busy awarding the prizes to the various entries, a full list of which awards will appear in Monday's issue.

The exhibition was most certainly a success as far as attendance went. Thousands of our citizens went to the fair. The people of Peterborough did their duty, they not only did that but they got full value for their money. Just for fun, curosity, or what ever any critic might name such business, a Times man followed several of those who had paid admission. Some of the remarks heard were, "Say, Minnie I thought you said the crowd would not be as large as last year. Why it's three times as large." Another said, "Say Jim, you said coming down in the car that there would be a larger crowd than last year. You win, there are more people than last year and I'll bet you another pair of gloves that saturday's crowd is bigger than today." Jim did not bet.

Still another accidentally overheard conversation ran thusly, "Mary, you must admit that you were wrong." "What do you mean Ben." "Why you said out in Smith that you would be sure the crowd at the fair would be less than last year." "Well," she replied, "there are certainly twice the crowd that I expected to see."

MESSRS. J. J. TURNER'S

As one entered the grounds yesterday the familiar name of J. J. Turner & Sons, was prominently to the front. It is not saying too much to note that, had it not been for the good work done by Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, that the fair would have never been the success it attained. Messrs. Turner had three large tents on the grounds just as one entered. One of them was a tent for consumotives, arranged in very particular for the accommodation of sufferers from the great white plague, and fitted up so that such unfortunates may, beneath its cover, fight and conquer this disease as recommended by the latest dictates of modern sciences. Messrs. Turner have thus assisted the medical men in arranging for the accommodation of patients ordered by the faculty to take the fresh air treatment. Next to this sanitary tent is a tent specially designed for isolation hospital purposes, wherein patients, under a doctor's orders, may be isolated from all chance of contaminating his friends with whatever disease he may have, and, at the same time be in as complete comfort as though underneath his own roof. Again this enterprising firm has a hunters' tent displayed that would make any man or woman accustomed to handling a gun for deer or bear crazy to sleep under.

In the main building as one enters from the east is the usual and ever renewed exhibition of Roy, the Photographer. Here we do not use the customary introductory title of "Mr. R." Roy "Roy the Photographer," is sufficient and tells a tale that is redundent with full lines of successful accomplishments in photographic art. Bob Roy is, without throwing bouquets at a local artist, acknowledged to be the leading artiat of his kind in Ontario.

WOMEN'S WORK.

The building is, as usually in evidence every fall, is occupied in every inch of space with shows of various kinds. Here are to be found big pumpkins, Brobdignagian cabbages, over grown squashes, baskets of tomatoes, samples, in too many cases, some three or four years' old, of ladies handiwork in the way of anti-macassars, pillow covers, etc. It seems queer that these judges do not tumble to the fact that exhibits of exactly the same goods are shown from year to year. Still, allowing for this chestnutty goods that are annually shown, and as often given prize after prize, the show of women's work was "away up." This exhibition was well worth many times the prizes granted and attracted close attention by the thousands present yesterday.

The Knock-out Blow.

The blow which knocked out Corbett was a revelation to the prize fighters. From the earliest days of the ring the knock-out blow was aimed for the jaw, the temple or the jugular vein. Stomach punches were thrown in to worry and weary the fighter, but if a scientific man had told one of the old fighters that the most vulnerable spot was the region of the stomach, he'd have laughed at him for an ignoramus. Dr. Pierce is bringing home to the public a parallel fact; that the stomach is the most vulnerable organ out of the prize ring as well as in it. We protect our heads, throats, feet and lungs, but the stomach we are utterly indifferent to, until disease finds the solar plexus and knocks us out. Make your stomach sound and strong by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you protect yourself in your most vulnerable spot. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures "weak stomach," indigestion, or dyspepsia, torpid liver, bad, thin and impure blood and other diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" has a specific curative effect upon all mucous surfaces and hence cures catarrh, no matter where located or what stage it may have reached. In Nasal Catarrh it is well to cleanse the passages with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy fluid while using the "Discovery" as a constitutional remedy. Why the "Golden Medical Discovery" cures catarrhal diseases, as of the stomach, bowels, bladder and other pelvic organs will be plain to you if you will read a booklet of extracts from the writings of eminent medical authorities endorsing its ingredients and explaining their curative properties. It is mailed free on request. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. This booklet gives all the ingredients entering into Dr. Pierce's medicines from which it will be seen that they contain not a drop of alcohol, glycerine being used in lieu.

No Pickpockets Reported

As it seems that pickpockets got busy at several of the fall fairs in nearby towns and hamlets, it might be noted that the local police force, with their usual promptitude and efficiency got busy Yesterday. A Times representative seeing P. S. Newhall and P. C. McDonald, in mufti at the fair grounds, spent an hour or so looking for "easy." These sleuths certainly did their duty to the city, but there was nothing doing. It looks like the fame of Peterborough as holding out a cold reception to crooks of all classes has permeated the whole crook fraternity of the Dominion. In any event not an attempt, as far as can be learned was made yesterday at the fair, to pick a pocket. Possibly the enforced sojourn of Phelps, et al at the Central Prison, may explain the honesty (?) of the threatened invading crooks.

Rudyard Kipling, the Famous Author Arrives in Canada

Arrived in Quebec Yesterday on the Empress of Ireland--He will Remain in Montreal Ten Days--The "Nation's Poet" Very Enthusiastic

Quebec, Sept. 28.—Among the distinguished passengers on board the R.M.S. Empress of Ireland, which arrived in port yesterday morning, was Mr. Rudyard Kipling, the renowned author, and Mrs. Kipling, who have come to Canada on a pleasure trip. The celebrated author could not be interviewed, but remained in his cabin until he left by special train at 8.10 a.m. for Montreal.

KIPLING VERY ENTHUSIASTIC.

After the Empress left Rimouski Monday evening and dinner had been served, Mr. Kipling delivered a speech to the passengers, which officers of the vessel agree in saying was one of the most powerful and impressive addresses ever given on board an ocean liner. He spoke of the comforts enjoyed today on ocean voyages, and eulogized the captain, and officers of the Empress for their uniform courtesy and kindness, and also gave words of encouragement to those who were coming to this country to settle, extolling the vast possibilities which Canada possessed for those making their future homes here, and showing an extensive knowledge of this country. He concluded his able address by asking all present to rise and drink to the health of the captain and officers, which was enthusiastically done.

THE "NATION'S POET."

The ship surgeon, Dr. Winder, replied to the toast on behalf of the captain, who was on the bridge at the time, and other officers, and thanked the "nation's poet" for his kind remarks, and also in the name of the passengers for his splendid address, which had been listened to with a keen interest.

An untoward happening occurred on this last trip of the Empress, when, on the 24th inst., a man named George Cowthers, aged 57 years, a third-class passenger on his way to Victoria, B.C., committed suicide by jumping overboard while temporarily insane.

AN UNOBTRUSIVE FIGURE.

Montreal, Sept. 28. — Mr. Kipling seemed in excellent health and spirits after his trip, which he declared was one of the most enjoyable sea voyages he had ever made. Clad in a rough tweed suit, with a cloth cap pulled down low over his face, the novelist and poet was a very unobtrusive figure in the crowd, but his face is too familiar to be able to pass unrecognized, and he was soon singled out. He is somewhat thinner than when last seen in this country several years ago, but he looks active and vigorous, and the twinkling eyes back of the glasses have the same keenness that distinguished them of old.

Mr. and Mrs. Kipling were met on their arrival by Mrs. Wolcott Balestier, mother of Mrs. Kipling. She had come from New York for the purpose, arriving in this city Monday. It is the intention of the Kiplings to spend a week or ten days in Montreal resting after their trip, and, though their future movements are not altogether settled, it is probable that they will make a visit to Battleboro, Vermont, where Mrs. Kipling's parents used to reside, and where she spent her life before she became the wife of the celebrated author. They are staying at the Place Viger Hotel.

Liverpool Importers Determined to do Business With Canada

London, Sept. 28.—At a meeting of the Provision Trade Association in Liverpool, J. E. Worrall, introducing Mr. Ruddick, the Canadian dairy commissioner, said the United States was becoming less and less an exporting country, so that Britain must look to the colonies for her increase in food supplies. He hoped Mr. Ruddick would tell all Canadian shippers that Liverpool importers were in a position and determined to do business.

Mr. Ruddick, in the course of his address, dealt with various matters of technical interest to the provision trade. He was convinced that he falling off in shipments of butter from Canada was only temporary, and that when the prices of cheese and butter became more even a large quantity of milk would be turned into butter instead of cheese. Bacon shipments would also become greater, as the government were assisting in the matter of increasing exportations from Canada.

Several members of the trade spoke in an appreciative manner of the remarks of Mr. Ruddick.

Mr. F. G. Howson Has Passed Away

Many Friends will Mourn the Loss of a Highly Respected Young Man

Yesterday the sudden death of Mr. Fred G. L. Howson, came as a great shock to his many friends in the city. The deceased who was a son of Mr. Geo. H. Howson, of 188 Edinburg St., had only been ill for about a week. On Saturday he was taken to the hospital where he underwent an operation for appendicitis. The late Mr. Howson was only 23 years of age and had lived nearly all his life in this city where he was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him. He was a prominent member of St. Paul's Young Men's Guild, and also a member of the C.G.E. Angling Club.

Besides his parents, two brothers and three sisters are left to mourn his loss. The brothers are Ernest H. and Arthur, of this city, and the sisters are Misses Marion, of Woodstock General hospital, and Lexi and Helen at home.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at two o'clock from the family residence, 188 Edinburg street, to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

The pall bearers will be chosen from the local Pattern Makers' Union of which the deceased was a member.

Houdry Pere Arrives at Havre

Yesterday afternoon the consummation of a recent family gathering was attained when Mr. L. C. Houedry, a real representative of the world-wide known pea dealing firm of Houedry, et cie, was in receipt of a cablegram from his father sent from Havre, France, noting that the latter, after a visit had safely arrived in his native land. A DISCOVERY OF GREAT VALUE

Because a Cure Was Found for Inflammatory Rheumatism

There are many types of rheumatism but none worse than inflammatory.

It was this kind that almost killed Mrs. Edw. Warman, of Kent Jct., N. B.

Every known remedy she tried, different doctors gave their advice, but the disease increased.

Weak and despairing, she was at her wits' end when the remarkable cure of Thos. Cullen was published. This gentleman was cured of rheumatism by "Ferrozone." Consequently Mrs. Warman used the same remedy. Here is her statement:

"For years I have been rheumatic. I tried various forms of relief without success. The disease increased, settled in my joints and muscles; these swelled, caused excruciating pain and kept me from sleeping. My limbs and arms stiffened, my shoulders were lame and prevented me from working. Week by week I was losing strength and despaired of finding a cure. It was a happy day I heard of Ferrozone. Every day I took Ferrozone I felt better, it eased the painful joints, gave rest so that not an ache has returned. New energy and a feeling of new life. Ferrozone cured my rheumatism, and even damp weather no longer affects me."

Ferrozone has power to destroy Uric acid, neutralise and enrich the blood, and therefore does cure the worst cases, Mrs. Warman's statement proves this.

By removing the cause of the disease and building up a reserve of energy Ferrozone is certain to cure. Sufferer, isn't it about time to stop experimenting? Ferrozone is a cure. We guarantee this. Sold by all dealers, 50c per box or six boxes for $2.50. Re-

PLACES OF RECREATION

There is a disposition among the people of some Canadian cities to regard the piling upon it of bricks and mortar as the highest use that any land within their borders can be put to. Every other consideration and interest is sacrificed to the requirements of building operations. Our American cousins are more appreciative of the importance of parks and breathing places. The makers of New York did not forsee the covering of all the available parts of the island with streets and buildings, yet they had the wisdom to reserve in the heart of the city that immense stretch of forest and glade and play ground, known as Central Park. The parks department of Cleveland maintains fifty-two baseball diamonds, several cricket grounds, lawn tennis courts, and bowling greens, all for the free use of those who desire to play on them. Allotment is made in order of application, and no interference is allowed with those who for the time have the right to the particular play ground.

The importance of this question has been recently emphasized by Mr J. J. Kelso, superintendent of neglected children, the cause of the cruelty to children in forcing them to seek recreation in the lanes and often on the streets of the city, and goes on to say:

"In these sports the bad little boys, who are often only lively boys, whose healthy instincts are repressed, are apt to dominate, so careful mothers keep the good little boys at home, where they wistfully flatten their noses against the window panes.

"In this manner civilization is cruel to its children. It stunts their growth, physical, moral, and intellectual. "Play," says Mr. Kelso, is a plea for public playgrounds, "is for young children an absolute necessity. They cannot grow up strong and active without exercise for their limbs. They cannot without physical exercise grow up morally robust and capable of self-control. Games teach them that others have rights that must be respected. They afford also the best intellectual training, including alertness, resourcefulness, presence of mind, and power of concentration.

Mr. Kelso says that playgrounds should be under proper supervision, containing swings, seesaws, slides, sand piles, wading pools, race tracks and baseball diamonds.

FAMOUS BRIDGES.

The Zambesi bridge in Africa is 450 feet in height.

The famous Niagara suspension bridge was begun in 1852 and completed in 1855. It is 245 feet above the water and 821 feet long.

The highest bridge in the world, the trolley bridge across the famous Royal gorge in Colorado, is 2,627 feet, half a mile, above the river below.

The Forth bridge, over the Firth of Forth, near Edinburgh, has two cantilever spans, each 1,710 feet in length, the longest in the world. The total length of this structure is one and four-sevenths miles.

One of the most peculiar bridges in the world is the tubular suspension bridge across Menai strait. This bridge consists of two lines of immense tubing, each 1,500 feet long, supported by three granite towers, besides the shore abutments. This strange bridge is 100 feet above the sea and weighs 11,000 tons.

The steel bridge the Portland and Seattle railroad is building across the Columbia at Vancouver will be a mile and a half long, the longest steel bridge in the world. It will be finished next January. Twenty thousand tons of steel will be used in it, not including the weight of the double track. The drawbridge is 464 feet long.

SPORTING NOTES.

There is an own sister to Sonoma Girl in Indianapolis, and they say she can trot in 2:10 very handily.

They say that Glenwood M., 2:07¼, will not stand the preparation for his race in Austria and has been retired to the stud.

In three months' time, Bill Squires says, he will try to redeem himself in the ring, so the promoters have stopped considering him for the present.

Pitcher Waldon Henley, farmed out by the Brooklyn club to the Rochester team, holds the strike out record in the Eastern league so far this season. He fanned twelve men in a recent game.

The fastest four-year-old colt so far this year is Boro Jolly, 2:15¼, by Boreal, 2:15¾. The fastest five-year-old is Athasham, 2:11, by Athadon, 2:28. The fastest new performer is Jaquar, 2:12¼, by Highwood, 2:21½.

It is reported that Mayor Busse of Chicago has decided to allow boxing in that city next fall. Permits will be granted to the Illinois A. A., the Chicago A. A., the Wabash A. C. and two other clubs yet to be named. The bouts are limited to six rounds, and there must be no clashing of dates.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

The Rev. Mendois de Sola has just completed twenty-five years of service as minister of the Spanish and Portuguese synagogue of Montreal.

Rev. Caspar Brunner, who in 1868 organized the German Reformed church of Bridgeport, Conn., is still its pastor and one of the oldest in the state in point of service.

Rev. Joseph A. Johnson, pastor of the Abyssinian church, who is the only minister in Portland, Me., with a union card, works as a painter during the week and preaches on Sunday.

It strikes Americans as odd to learn that the sermons of Phillips Brooks, which have lately been translated into German, are pronounced "too high" for the German churchgoing public.

A sign of the times in England is a movement for a stricter Sabbath, which has the support of the archbishop of Canterbury, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Westminster and the Rev. John S. Lidgett, representing the nonconformist churches.

Tried to Kill the Wife Whom He Pitied

New York, Sept. 28. — Despondent as a result of ill-health and reverses, Harry Chernock, a garment cutter, aged 30 years, today made an attempt to kill his wife by stabbing her with a pair of tailor's shears, and then jumped from a fourth-story window, receiving injuries from which he died in a hospital a few hours later.

For six months Chernock had been so ill that he was unable to work. To support their five-year-old son and her husband, Mrs. Chernock went to work in a sewnt shop for went to work in a sweve shop for small wages. When Chernock saw his wife growing pale and haggard from her toil, it tried on his nerves.

Seven Daughters Wed Earls

London, Sept. 26.—The birthday of the Duchess of Buccleuch is a reminder on a family record that must be without parallel. She is one of the seven daughters of the late Duke and Duchess of Abercorn, and none of the Duchess of Buccleuch's six sisters has married a peer of less rank than an earl. They became respectively the wives of the Marquises of Lansdowne and Blandford, and of the Earls of Durham, Winterton, Mount-Edgecombe, and Lichfield.

Snake Worship.

Python worship or the worship of snake gods is still practiced in parts of the west coast of Africa. In Dahomey and Ashanti there are temples where pythons are kept to receive the adoration of the people. The snakes are not confined to the precincts of the temples. Small holes are left in the inclosing wall, through which they pass and sometimes make themselves very much at home in the houses of the people. When a stray snake is found word is sent to the temple, the priests come and with many apologies to his snakeship pick him up and carry him back home.

Cold Blooded Animals.

The so called cold blooded animals vary from the warm blooded in the particular that their blood changes temperature in accordance with their surroundings. The temperature of a fish will be almost exactly the same as that of the water around it, possibly one or two degrees higher. A snake's temperature is higher in summer than in winter, the average being 82 degrees. A bird's average temperature is 107. The average temperature of the mammals is 101 degrees.

Confided in Her.

Her Mother—Does your husband take you into his confidence regarding his business affairs? Young Wife—Oh, yes; he did so only this morning. When I asked him to let me have $50 for a new gown he said he was very sorry, but business was so bad just now he couldn't possibly do it.

How Odd.

Joakley—Queer thing about that tall man over there. All his intimate friends call him "Short." Poakley—Ah, just for a joke, I suppose? Joakley—No; because that's his name.—Exchange.

Left That to Others.

Hyker—You don't seem to be worrying any about your failure in business. Pyker—Oh, no; that's one of the things I have turned over to my creditors.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO

Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 70 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

As Guy sat nearest the door, it was he who held it ajar while Madeline came in, her soft brown eyes glistening with something like a tear, and her cheeks burning with excitement as she took the chair indicated by Guy Remington, who found himself master of ceremonies.

Poor little Madeline!

CHAPTER II.

Madge her schoolmates called her, because the name suited her, they said; but Maddy they called her at home, and there was a world of unutterable tenderness in the voices of the old couple, her grandparents, when they said that name, while their dim eyes lighted up with pride and joy when they rested upon the young girl who answered to the name of Maddy. Their only daughter's only child, she had lived with them since her mother's death, for her father was a sea captain, who never returned from his last voyage to China, made two months before she was born. Very lonely and desolate would the home of Grandfather Markham have been without the presence of Madeline, but with her there, the old red farmhouse seemed to the aged couple like a paradise.

Forty years they had lived there, tilling the rather barren soil of the rocky homestead, and, saving the sad night when they heard that Richard Clyde was lost at sea, and the far sadder morning when their daughter died, bitter sorrow had not come to them; and, truly thankful for the blessings so long vouchsafed them, they had retired each night in peace with God and man, and riseh each morning to pray. But a change was coming over them. In an evil hour Grandpa Markham had signed a note for a neighbor and friend, who failed to pay, and so it all fell on Mr. Markham, who, to meet the demand, mortgaged his homestead; the recreant neighbor still insisting that long before the mortgage should be due, he certainly would be able himself to meet it. This, however, he had not done, and, after twice begging off a foreclosure, poor old Grandfather Markham found himself at the mercy of a grasping, remorseless man, into whose hands the mortgage had passed. It was vain to hope that Silas Slocum would wait. The money must either be forthcoming, or the red farmhouse be sold, with its few acres of land. Among his neighbors there was not one who had the money to spare, even if he had been willing to do so. And so he must look among strangers.

"If I could only help," Madeline had said one evening when they sat talking over their troubles; "but there's nothing I can do, unless I apply for our school this summer. Mr. Green is committeeman; he likes us, and I don't believe but what he'll let me have it. I mean to go and see;" and, ere the old people had recovered from their astonishment, Madeline had caught her bonnet and shawl, and was flying down the road.

Madeline was a favorite with all, especially with Mr. Green, and as the school would be small that summer, the plan struck him favorably. Her age, however, was an objection, and he must take time to see what others thought of a child like her becoming a schoolmistress. Others thought well of it, and so before the close of the next day it was generally known through Honedale, as the southern part of Devonshire was called, that pretty little Madge Clyde had been engaged as teacher, she receiving three dollars a week, with the understanding that she must board herself. It did not take Madeline long to calculate that twelve times three were thirty-six, more than a tenth of what her grandfather must borrow. It seemed like a little fortune, and blithe as a singing bird she flitted about the house, now stopping a moment to fondle her pet kitten, while she whispered the good news in its very appreciative ear, and then stroking her grandfather's silvery hair, as she said:

"You can tell them that you are sure of paying thirty-six dollars in the fall, and if I do well, maybe they'll hire me longer. I mean to try my very best. I wonder if ever anybody before me taught a school when they were only fourteen and a half. Do I look as young as that?" and for an instant the bright, childish face scanned itself eagerly in the old-fashioned mirror, with the figure of an eagle on the top.

She did look very young, and yet there was something womanly, too, in the expression of the face, something which said that life's realities were already beginning to be understood by her.

"If my hair were not short I should do better. What a pity I cut it the last time; it would have been so long and splendid now," she continued, giving a kind of contemptuous pull at the thick, beautiful brown hair on whose glossy surface there was in certain lights a reddish tinge which added to its beauty.

"Never mind the hair, Maddy," the old man said, gazing fondly at her with a half sigh as he remembered another brown head, pillowed now beneath the graveyard turf. "Maybe you won't pass muster, and then the hair will make no difference. There's a new committeeman, that Dr. Holbrook from Boston, and new ones are apt to be mighty strict."

Instantly Maddy's face flushed all over with nervous dread, as she thought. "What if I should fail?" fancying that to do so would be an eternal disgrace. But she should not. She was called by everybody the very best scholar in school, the one whom the teachers always put forward when desirous of showing off, the one whom Mr. Tiverton, and Squire Lamb, and Lawyer Whittemore always noticed so much. Of course she should not fail, though she did dread Dr. Holbrook, wondering much what he would ask her first, and hoping it would be something in arithmetic, provided he did not stumble upon decimals, where she was apt to get bewildered. She had no fears of grammar. She could pick out the most obscure sentence and dissect a double relative with perfect ease; then, as to geography, she could repeat whole pages of that, while in the spelling-book, the foundation of a thorough education, as she had been taught, she had no superiors and but a very few equals. Still she would be very glad when it was over, and she appointed Monday, both because it was close at hand, and because that was the day her grandfather had set in which to ride to Aikenside, in an adjoining town, and ask its young master for the loan of three hundred dollars.

He could hardly tell why he had thought of applying to Guy Remington for help, unless it were that he once had saved the life of Guy's father, who, as long as he lived, had evinced a great regard for his benefactor, frequently asserting that he meant to do something for him. But the something was never done, the father was dead, and in his strait the old man turned to the son, whom he knew to be very rich, and who he had been told was exceedingly generous.

"How I wish I could go with you clear up to Aikenside! They say it's so beautiful," Madeline had said, as on Saturday evening they sat discussing the expected events of the following Monday: "Mrs. Noah, the housekeeper, had Sarah Jones there once to sew, and she told me all about it. There are graveled walks, and nice green lawns, and big, tall trees, and flowers—oh! so many!—and marble fountains, with gold fishes in the basin; and statues, big as folks, all over the yard, with two brass lion on the gateposts. But the house is finest of all. There's a drawing room bigger than a ballroom, with carpet that let your feet sink in so far; pictures and mirrors clear to the floor. Think of that, grandpa! a looking glass so tall that one can see the very bottom of their dress and know just how it hangs. Oh, I do so wish I could have a peep at it! There are two in one room, and the windows are like doors, with lace curtains; but what is queerest of all, the chairs and sofas are covered with real silk, just like that funny, gored gown of grandma's up in the oak chest. Dear me! I wonder if I'll ever live in such a place as Aikenside?"

"No, no, Maddy, no. Be satisfied with the lot where God has put you, and don't be longing after something higher. Our Father in heaven knows best what is best for us; as He didn't see fit to put you up at Aikenside, 'tain't noways likely you'll ever live in the like of it."

Knives Are Tiny Saws.

Knives, no matter how carefully sharpened, are little saws. The grinding away of the steel, done by the stone, is not an even work, but when the edge gets thin is a process of tearing away tiny bits of steel by the grit of the stone. This tearing makes the teeth. A fine stone makes fine teeth, a coarse stone coarse teeth. A carving knife used on meat is sharpened on a coarse stone or a steel and has coarse teeth, although its edge is thick. Its action in parting the meat is more that of a saw than a fine wedge. No matter how soft it may be it will not cut easily unless it is drawn over the meat and not simply pressed down. A razor, however, with its paperlike edge, will cut into flesh with a simple pressure. It is a wedge dividing the fibers of flesh just as a wedge of iron divides the fibers of the log it splits. But a razor is a saw, too, only as it is ground on the finest stones and later finished with a leather strap, its teeth are very fine indeed—hundreds and hundreds to the inch of blade.—C. H. Claudy in St. Nicholas.

Origin of Curtain Calls.

The first curtain call took place on the evening of Feb. 20, 1743. On that memorable evening Voltaire's "Merope" was performed for the first time in Paris. The author was known to the Paris public, but nothing that they had seen of his had pleased them so much as "Merope," and the enthusiasm found expression in noisy demands to see the author. In a letter Voltaire says this of the incident: "They dragged me out and led me by force to the box occupied by the Duchesse de Villars and her daughter-in-law. The whole theater seemed to have gone mad—all shouted to the duchesse to kiss me. The noise became so great that the lady finally obeyed. So I was, like Alain Chartier, publicly kissed, but he was asleep, while I was wide awake." Now authors answer similar calls by appearing before the curtain. They gain in so far that they can be seen better by their audience, but they must dispense with the duchesse's kiss—at least in public.—Berliner Tageblatt.

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxed blood pressure away from pain centers, itself is charming, pleasingly delightful, gently, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

Have you a headache, it's blood pressure.

If it's painful periods with women, same cause.

If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop pain in minutes and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and well and pain you? Of course it does. It's congested, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is always. It's simply Common Sense.

Pronunciation of "Theatre."

If "theatre" was originally written "theater" in English, has its pronunciation also varied among the orthodox—that is to say, was there ever a time when correct speakers said "theayter," as many of the incorrect still do? There is no direct evidence in verse of a serious kind for such pronunciation so far as we know. Shakespeare certainly pronounced the word as we do now, says a London journal. But since "theayter" does really represent a long "a" of the original Greek and Latin it is not easy to understand how the vulgar could have blundered on to it of their own accord. It would have been more comprehensible if they had turned an orthodox "theayter" into "theenter." Just as the second "a" in "Amasis" goes too often popularly shortened now. The French language has had to mark the length of the "a" in "theatre" by giving it a rather irregular circumflex accent.

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the stomach, etc.

A weak stomach causing dyspepsia, a weak heart with palpitation or intermittent pulse, always means weak stomach nerves or weak heart nerves. Strengthen these inside or controlling nerves with Dr. Shoop's Restorative and see how quickly these ailments disappear. Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis., will mail samples free. Write for them. A test will tell. Your health is certainly worth that.

Cheap.

The clubwoman giggled.

"You know, my husband's birthday is next week," she said, "and I"—

Laughter overcame her for the moment.

—"and I have been taking a cigar out of his case every day for the last three months. Well," she went on, "I've got a hundred now, and I'll give them to him for a birthday present."—Exchange.

Bank of Goldfield, Nevada.

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross cuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

IN SHORT FORM FOR BUSY READERS

—Bigger crowds than ever before, notwithstanding the cold weather, attended the fall fair yesterday.

—The steamer Ajax yesterday towed into port a scow laden with cordwood from Stony Lake.

—Messrs. J. J. Turner have at the fair a complete set of international code flags as used from battleship to battleship to convey messages.

—Yesterday Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, at the fair, threw to the breeze the largest Union Jack that Peterborough ever saw, the flag was 40x20 feet in size.

—How those school children did invade the fair yesterday. They were there in clouds that would make mosquitos in a tamarac swamp look like isolated individuals.

—It seems that fortune tellers and palmists are a prominent feature of the local fall fair. Yesterday they did "handsomely."

—Carlyle Potter, who had his leg broken Wednesday evening is getting along nicely. The limb is broken at the thigh.

—One of the greatest attractions, if one could judge by the glistening of several well known married ladies' eyes at the fair, was the tent of a genuine Gypsey fortune teller.

—The first regular monthly meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., will be held on Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock. A full attendance is requested.

—Messrs. Reginald Turner, James Campbell and staff, of J. J. Turner & Sons, have gone to Thamesville to decorate for the Old Boys' Reunion and fall fair in that town.

—Only two tenders were submitted for the building of the Park street church. One was for brick and stone work and the other covered the complete job. Neither were accepted as they were both too high.

—The Mann Lumber Company yesterday afternoon granted their employes a half holiday in order that they might attend the fair. In this the firms are setting a good example that other industrial concerns might well follow.

—Mr F. R. J. MacPherson yesterday sold his Ford touring auto car to Mr. Charles Gardener of Forboro. Mr. Gardener took the car home during the afternoon. It is equipped with a ten horse-power gasolene engine, and is one of the easiest running machines ever turned out by the Ford Company.

—One woman, whose name is familiar to all residents of Peterborough, after leaving the tent of a fortune teller at the fair, was heard to say, "Nasty old cat, telling me I would get a tall blond-haired husband, when I have been married for ten years to a short dark but dear man."

—The Peterborough Board of Trade is contemplating the holding of a banquet during November. This bunch of citizens who are doing their best, and doing it well to advance the city's interests should have such a banquet and no one would grudge their time.

PERUNA STRENGTHENS THE ENTIRE SYSTEM.

"Two years ago, an accident necessitated my confinement for several weeks. The good health I had enjoyed was slipping away and there developed a complication of diseases. My physician said my case was one of general debility.

"Among the many ailments which developed was a serious attack of catarrh, which annoyed me considerably and kept me awake whole nights.

"I decided to give Peruna a trial and soon found it acting as a wonderful tonic to my system. The catarrh grew less severe and shortly afterward disappeared, as did also the various other maladies.

"I attribute my prompt relief and ultimate cure entirely to the use of Peruna and gladly recommend it."

FLOOD IN FRANCE INUNDATES VALLEY

At Malaga Many Dead Bodies were Washed Out to the Sea--Loss Over Four Million Dollars in One District--Heroic Rescues Recorded.

Paris, Sept. 29.—The flood situation in the south of France is a little better today. The damage in the department of Herault is estimated at $4,000,000.

Many heroic rescues are recorded. The waters rose so rapidly in the valleys that persons working in the vineyards were compelled to seek refuge in trees and on the tops of houses and walls. Where the currents were swift the boats sent to the relief of the endangered persons encountered considerable difficulty in rescuing them.

Parliament will be asked to furnish relief for the sufferers.

Much of the responsibility for the disastrous nature of the flood is attributed to the unrestricted denudation of the forests.

CHURCH UNDERMINED.

Madrid, Sept. 29.—The Church of Benamargosa, which was undermined by the flood, fell during the night. There was no loss of life.

At Malaga many dead bodies have been washed down the river and out to sea.

Jamaicans are Bitter Against English Firms

Kingston, Jamaica, Sept. 29.—There is a bitter feeling against the English insurance companies here growing out of actions following the disaster of last January. It is charged that the companies are delaying the cases by technicalities.

Their latest move is an announcement by counsel that the companies propose in one action to make a counter claim for the declaration that the loss sustained by the policyholders was caused by the earthquake.

This means, if it succeeds, that other cases cannot be proceeded with because the companies would win under the earthquake clause.

Merchants think that local companies should be formed to carry insurance. As the restoration of Kingston progresses the boycott of English concerns increases.

Collegiate Institute Cross Country Run

The start and finish will be at the corner of Water and Murray streets.

The annual field day of sports will be held next Friday afternoon on the Oval. Besides the cups presented to the winners of the junior and senion championships, Mr. Alex. Gibson has donated two medals to the winners of each.

New School Inspector Here

This was his first visit to Peterborough since his appointment to the position and on Saturday morning he met members of the Board of Education who were pleased with their choice of an inspector. As soon as the new teacher in the Brockville Institute has been secured, Mr. Mowat will be free to come to Peterborough.

Are Taking Less Patent Medicines Now

Gives a Highly Recommended Home Recipe for Kidney Trouble

A well known authority states that there are more cases of kidney trouble here now than ever before, while recent reports show that more people succumb each year to some form of kidney disease than any other cause.

When there is sickness, examine the urine. Rheumatism is only a symptom of kidney trouble. It is nothing more or less than excessive uric acid in the blood, which the sluggish, inactive kidneys fail to filter out, leaving it to decompose and settle about the joints and muscles, causing intense suffering; frequently resulting in deformity, often reaching the heart when death ensues.

Pains across the back, frequent, painful and suppressed urinations and other symptoms of weak bladder are not the only signs of kidney trouble; many cases of stomach disease, headache, pain in the heart, inactive liver etc., are but symtoms, the cause of which can be traced to feeble, clogged kidneys.

The physicians for the insurance companies always carefully examine and report on the condition of the urine. It is a certain sign of sickness or health of the human body.

A test of the urine should be made by every man and woman at least once every year. A simple test is to void a small quantity of urine in a bottle or glass and let it stand over night; next morning, if there is a reddish brick-dust sediment, or white flakes or cloudiness present, either consult some reputable physician or take a good vegetable treatment. The following prescription is recommended highly in these cases, and if desired the sulfuric acid mix it at home. Any good prescription pharmacist has the ingredients, which are naturally not intrusive: Compound Kargon, one ounce; Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. Where any of the symptoms enumerated above are present, good results are sure to follow immediately the use of this simple prescription.

No Pockets Were Picked at the Fair

Pickpockets who came to last week's fair must have left in disgust as they either were afraid to operate or their hands had lost their cunning. P. C. Newhall and P. C. McDonald, in citizens' clothes kept a sharp look out for such gentry, but while two or three men were suspected as being possible crooks, no one was touched for a dollar, nor did these men attempt to get busy with other peoples' pocketbooks. It speaks volumes for the efficiency of Peterborough's police force, that with about six thousand people, many unsuspecting people from the rural districts, gathered together, that not a pocket was tampered with.

A Popular Pastime

The Charlotte street roller rink is certainly one of the most popular places of amusement in Peterborough. Here amusement and healthy exercise go hand in hand. Tonight the 57th Band will be at the rink and discourse sweet strains appropriate to the movements of the skater. Tomorrow night ladies will be admitted free to the upper galleries. Wednesday night there will be a half-mile roller skating race for a valuable prize. This is an open race. There will be another band concert on Friday night.

Rev. Dr. Griffin Preached Here

Yesterday Rev. Dr. Griffin of Toronto, who is in charge of the superannuation fund of the Methodist Church in Canada, spoke on this subject and in the interests of the fund in Charlotte street Methodist church. The doctor is in a position to speak with authority upon this subject which is claiming more attention from the leaders in the church than has been given to it in the past and delivered stirring address.

Old Postal Rates to be Renewed

It is thought that the increased postal charges on drop letters from one cent to two cents each will be short lived. On Saturday a despatch was received from Montreal which insinuates that the postmaster-general states that he will introduce a bill at the next session of parliament providing for one cent postage on drop letters. It is expected that it will become effective shortly after the New Year. This will remove the only objection that has ever been made against the introduction of the street delivery.

New Methodist Church Discussed

It looks as though a new Methodist church will be erected in the south end of the city. This subject was discussed by the Financial District meeting of the Methodist Church last week, when it received deep and serious consideration. With a view of increasing the interest in the work of the Epworth League and Sunday schools, it was suggested that a joint convention of the forces of these two organizations would be productive of good, and it is probable that this recommendation will be acted upon.

Interesting Christening Ceremony Yesterday

Little Son of Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Hill Receives the Sacrament of Baptism

Yesterday afternoon a charming combination of religious ceremony and social function was in evidence. After the Sunday school exercises at St. Luke's church were concluded, a most interesting christening was held when the sturdy and charming little son of Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Hill received the sacrament of baptism, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, rector of that church, performing the rite.

The godfathers were Dr. J. T. Halliday and Lord Strathcona. Mr. Hill the father of the child, by request acting as Lord Strathcona's "proxy." Mrs. (Hon.) Robt. Hamilton, of Auburn, acting as godmother to her infant grandson. The little one was given the names of Hamilton, Donald, the first in memory of the late Hon. Robert Hamilton and Donald, after his godfather Lord Strathcona. After the ceremony at the church, a large number of invited guests gathered in at "Auburn," Mrs. Hamilton's residence. After refreshments had been served, and the christening cake distributed, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt in kindly and appropriate terms proposed the health of "The Baby," which was duly honored, Dr. Halliday responding for his godson. Among those present at Auburn, were Mr. P. Allison, Mr. W. Blanchetti, Mr. and Mrs. John Carnegie, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Collins, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Clementi, Mrs. Colthard, Miss Collins, Mrs. R. S. Davidson, Mr. and Mrs. Dobie, Dr. and Mrs. Eastwood, Dr. and Miss Halliday, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Goodwill, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hatton, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Kenny, Miss Lundy, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Learmonth, Miss B. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Mulholland, Mr. Cyril Moore, Lieut.-Col. Rogers, Mr. R. B. Rogers, Mrs. G. W. Rubidge, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Ritchie, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Wood, Dr. and Mrs. Young and others.

Mr. and Mrs. Hill received the heartiest congratulations on their little boy who was greatly admired.

Harvey May Have Local Option

It seems as though a vote may be taken in the township of Harvey, as mentioned at the Methodist district meeting Friday afternoon, when a communication was read from the field secretary in reference to the work being done, and it was decided to communicate with Rev. Dr. Chown. It is understood that a petition is being circulated at the present time in this township with a view of securing the signatures necessary to having a vote taken.

A TIMELY HINT

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION" INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP, which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use. millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs neither boosting nor boasting, for if we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present advice is becoming easier almost immediately wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

Funeral of the Late Frederick W.L. Howson

The funeral of the late Frederick William Laing Howson, took place yesterday afternoon from the family residence, 188 Edinburgh street, to the Little Lake cemetery.

The pall bearers were Messrs. F. Dawson, G. Galley, H. Cook, R. McKee, P. Gilbert and A. Laing.

The service at the house was conducted by Rev. Marshall P. Talling, Ph. D., of St. Paul's church, and Rev. E. A. Pearson, pastor of George street Methodist church. The latter also read the burial service at the cemetery.

The funeral was attended by relatives both of this city and out of town, and a very large gathering of friends and acquaintances. The floral tributes to the memory of the deceased young man were numerous and costly, and testified to the high esteem in which he was held by a large circle of warm friends attracted to him in life by his lovable disposition and an open-hearted and generous nature, worthy of emulation by all young men. Among the floral offerings were beautiful mementos from the Hamilton Pattern Works, Hamilton; the Ideal Porcelain Works, Port Hope; Y.M.C.A., St. Paul's Young Men's Guild, C.G.E. Angling Club, Pattern department C.G.E. Co., Peterborough Lock Company, Camp of '05, '06, Peterborough, and Pattern Makers' League, N.A. One hook was needed to convey the flowers to the cemetery.

The remains were laid in the vault pending a special construction of the grave in deference to the wishes of deceased.

The family have the sincerest sympathy of a large portion of the community in their bereavement.

Free Postal Delivery Now In Operation

On Saturday Morning the New Mail Delivery was Inaugurated

For the first time in the history of Peterborough, letters addressed to the citizens, at their respective street numbers, were on Saturday taken round by paid letter carriers.

Mr. Robt. Durston, under whose energetic management the system has been perfected and put into operation is greatly pleased with the carriers and with their initial efforts. Mr. Arthur Webster, Mr. Ross' secretary, who came down from Toronto Friday evening, was at the office when the final work was done preparing the different routes. He returned Saturday morning confident that the new plan here would be successful and expressed himself as highly satisfied with the men and the arrangements made.

Friday night the post office staff cleared out all the letters and papers that had street addresses and on Saturday morning on the first trip 1,000 letters and 500 papers were distributed. The morning train from the east which was due at 5.18 a.m., did not arrive until 7.25 and thus that mail was not taken on the first delivery, but went out at ten o'clock.

A large number of circulars were posted by local merchants for delivery and were all distributed, whereas by the old system they might have stayed in the office several weeks and not even then called for. If a letter or parcel has not the street number, the directory is referred to and an attempt made to deliver it and if this is impossible it is left at the delivery.

The result of the free delivery will be that there will be less crowding in the office and farmers can readily obtain their mail on Saturday without a delay of an hour or more. The arrangements in the office have been so perfected that within a month the carriers will be thoroughly efficient.

Police Court

On Saturday morning in the police court, Mrs. Mary Duncan, wife of the man Duncan who recently was convicted of assaulting High County Constable Cochrane and given two months in jail therefor, was charged with stealing a long and valuable gold chain from Mrs. R. E. Wood. This latter lady, with her family board at the National Hotel, at which place the alleged crime was committed. Mrs. Duncan elected to be tried by a jury and a preliminary hearing was given her case at four p.m. Saturday.

Shortly after ten a.m. Saturday, P. C. Meharry ran in a man who had tarried too long and persistently with alcoholic beverages. The prisoner had evidently sustained a severe fall or had been in a scrap as he was injured seriously in the head and had lost much blood.

Local Young Lady Visits California

Miss Marjorie Latimer, daughter of Mr. J. W. Latimer, the well known Peterborough commercial traveller of 307 Bethune street, has accompanied her uncle Mr. Hugh Latimer, on an extended visit to the latter's extensive orange ranch in California.

Mr. Hugh Latimer, who formerly resided in Ottawa, has just with his wife, two sons and a daughter, concluded a visit with his brother at 307 Bethune street as above intimated. Mr. Latimer had to cut his visit somewhat short owing to the calls on his time on the Californian. He owns and operates one of the largest individual orange and lemon groves in the Golden States, situated at Redlands, Cal. We trust that Miss Marjorie will have a pleasant visit in the semi-tropical climate of California, whilst the people of this city will be shovelling snow and stoking furnaces.

Chas. A. Burton Was Discharged

Our readers will remember that about a week or so ago a young man named Chas. A. Burton, was tried before his Worship County Magistrate Edmison on a charge of stealing $30 from a North Monaghan farmer named Payne. Whilst the evidence, at the time of the original trial was given in full. To epitomize, the evidence practically ran that Payne for whom Burton had worked for a month last spring, came into town a week ago Tuesday and meeting Burton asked him to come out to the farm. Payne got $40 out of the post office in an envelope. Payne went into Grafton's, with a $20, a $10 and two $5 bills and bought some goods, spending part of a $5 bill. He got in change some silver and a $2 bill. The $2 bill he put in a separate part of his pocketbook. That night he left the pocketbook in a trousers pocket, said garment being left hanging on a nail in his bedroom.

Burton slept in an adjoining room. On Saturday evening Payne intending to go into the city went to his trousers pocket and took out the wallet. He found that instead of $37 there was only $7 in the wallet. The $2 and a $5 bill were folded together, but the $20 and the $10 bill were gone. Payne had Burton, who was proven to have had several bills in his possession Thursday morning, when he suddenly left Payne's for the city, as he said a barber's account Burton at the trial explained the possession by him of the bills as noted, by saying he had certain money saved up in his trunk.

On Saturday afternoon Burton was brought for trial before Judge Welter.

To revert to the original trial, it might be mentioned that Magistrate Edmison, before whom Burton elected to be tried, heard not only the witnesses for the prosecution but also that of Burton himself. At Saturday's trial the crown attorney at once remarked that the prisoner pleaded not guilty, and recommended that he be discharged. His honor seemed to think that when Magistrate Edmison had, under the circumstances existing heard the evidence of the prisoner, Burton, he, the magistrate, should have given a decision in the case. The prisoner was then discharged.

A BIG MINING WAR IN YUKON DISTRICT

Guggenheim's Men In Deadly Conflict With the Opposition Force--Six Surveyors and Workmen Were Shot.

Valdez, Alaska, Sept. 29.—Six surveyors and workmen were shot and wounded in a clash between the Guggenheim forces of the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad and the Alaska-Nome Railway. All the wounded were men of the latter company.

The party was making a preliminary survey for the Nome Railroad, which is planned from Valdez to the summit. They had advanced 100 yards up the canyon when they were surprised by an ambush of the Guggenheim men, headed by Edward Hassey, once a United States marshal.

Hassey hailed the surveyors and ordered them to stop, saying his men would shoot if any further advance was made. The surveyors believed Hassey was bluffing and continued working. They were met by a fusillade of bullets. Deputy marshals are searching for the assailants.

Financial interests in Valdez have been waging a dramatic fight against wealthy eastern men, most prominent of whom are the Guggenheims. The contest is over the opening up of the rich copper beds in the interior of Alaska. The residents of the district are anxious to open a way to the ore fields as soon as possible, but it is asserted that the Guggenheims are making every effort to prevent them, to "bottle up Valdez." It is asserted that the eastern interests hope to prevent access to this territory until they can make sure of obtaining the richest claims for themselves. To do this, it is charged, they are trying to prevent the building of a railway to the interior.

The difficulty at the present time is the transportation of the ore. Until railways can be put through to the interior the ore is practically valueless. It is over the question of the right to build railways that the fight has centered.

The Cooper River & Northwestern Railway, the Morgan-Guggenheim road, last year obtained a charter, made surveys and apparently had every intention of going ahead. The same interests recently bought the White Pass & Yukon Railway, from Skagway to Dawson, and control also the Northwestern Steamship Company. Shortly after the right of way had been obtained at Valdez work was begun, but it suddenly ceased and the men were called away to begin similar operations at Katalla.

The citizens became indignant and decided to form a company and build an electric road to Copper Center and Fairbanks.

The Weather Man was Unkind to the Fall Fair Directors

The president, directors and officers of the Peterborough Exhibition this year, even though the receipts were badly hurt by the inclemency of Saturday's weather, have at least the satisfaction of knowing, and knowing that the general public knows, that they at least "made good." As noted before, the attendance on the second day, even though then the weather was somewhat threatening was enormous, and all who went had naught but the kindest and most complimentary words for the way the fair had been managed this year, and for the number and class of exhibits shown.

Conservative estimates by the president and gatekeepers placed the attendance on Friday at over 6,000 people. Over 5,000 tickets were sold at the gates, and with the addition of those who had goods entered and those who had membership tickets, this estimate cannot be extravagant.

As far as possibly lay in the power of mortal men those in charge of the fair kept faith with the public. The continued downpour of Saturday limited the paid attendance to an almost infinitesimable sum and the races and other events had to be cancelled. All day Saturday, not only hundreds of local people, but scores from adjoining counties, who had come to take in the fair were sadly disappointed. Everywhere was heard the question, "Say do you think it is going to clear up?"

Nearly every class of exhibits was well filled. The cattle display was not quite up to that of the previous year, nor were there quite so many hogs. The horse show was good and Friday's race could not have been bette: nor attracted more attention by the crowd. The poultry show was splendid, and holding it under canvas a marked improvement. The exhibits in the main hall were above the average and were closely inspected by thousands. It is impossible as yet to ascertain accurately how the fair will turn out financially, as the bad weather of Saturday reversed the optimistic ideas entertained on Friday.

Well the fair of this year is over, and those having it in charge did well.

Mark Spencely Will Challenge Hartley

Mr. Mark Spencely is not a dead one yet. He is about to issue a challenge to Mr. Dav. Hartley, of this city, and Jas. Reynolds of Port Hope, who have received considerable news paper notoriety as long distance pedestrians, for a 65 or 105-mile—matters not which—go as you please race.

Mr. Spencely is the unbeaten walking champion of this district, and is now in active training preparatory to challenging the above pair. Mark has for the past month been employed as night watchman of the city, but has resigned his position in order that he may go into more active training. Mr. Spencely is of the opinion that both Messrs Hartley and Reynolds are hanging a bluff and are glorying in the fact that they are continually being brought before the public as heroes. "Why not show the color of their money and get down to business," remarked Mr. Spencely to a newspaper man. "Why, I'll have taken Mr. Hartley decisively, and although he is a much younger man than myself, I can repeat he does."

Mr. Spencely is quite confident in his ability and during the last two weeks has been testing his staying powers by making nine hour walks about the city, taking out a few minutes for a lunch or refreshments.

Streak of Independence In B.C. People

Vancouver, Sept. 29.—At Victoria a discussion has blown up in the political press concerning the honesty of the intentions of the British Columbia government in passing the immigration bill of the present year. As finally printed for report, the bill in clause 4 says that the immigration of undesirable persons shall be "lawful" instead of "unlawful." The Liberals say that Mr. Bowser, attorney-general, invalidated his own measure in this way, and Mr. Bowser on the other hand produces his corrected copy of the bill, in which the right word, "unlawful," appears. Evidently it was a typographical error, but there is enough in the incident to afford politicians who prefer rather to talk about side issues than the real question, to make a good deal of warm play to the gallery.

In British Columbia politics there are four parties—the Conservatives, Liberals, Laborites and Socialists. The Socialists are strictly of the harmless variety, fond of stage effects, even though they incur the reproach of disloyal manners and speech. Their leader, a well-educated Englishman, is a fine theorist and a very good fellow, and in British Columbia at least he is not misunderstood. He shocks the east now and then, but likes to do so, and the general run of people on the coast bear him no resentment on that account.

The Laborites of British Columbia have a stronger alliance in the east than any of the other parties. They think they could make the immigration of Asiatics a labor issue from end to end of the Dominion, and if they were in earnest about it, there is little doubt that by this method they would quickly and deeply stir the ranks of labor everywhere and put life and vigor into the labor cause.

But there is little likelihood of their using the labor organization to the confusion to the federal Liberal party. They realize that both in the east and west the labor leaders in active politics are as a rule stronger Liberals than they are labor men.

IS INSANITY INCREASING?

The latest figures on insanity in England have given rise to a renewed discussion of the extent to which mental breakdown has actually increased in amount. The figures, of course, on their face show a very great increase: Ten years ago one person in every 314 in England and Wales was reported insane. Today the proportion is one in 282. This tendency to increase has continued for more than half a century and has been much stronger than the increase in the population. In 1859 the total number of the insane was 36,762. Today it is 123,988. That is an increase of 237 per cent. Meantime the population has increased only 77 per cent.

The most important type of insanity recorded is senile dementia, which alone accounted last year for 38 per cent of the new cases reported. The theory is advanced by some medical authorities that modern medical science keeps alive the bodies of men after their worn-out minds have given way under the nerve and brain strain of modern labor. The asylums and sanitariums open for these unfortunates, and their lives are prolonged indefinitely. According to this theory there would have been fewer insane under the older conditions, and also those who became insane would have died much more quickly, both factors contributing to the increasing rate.

Some alienists believe, however, that the increase in insanity is more apparent than real. For one thing the definition of insanity is wider than it used to be, so that people are recorded as insane who formerly would merely have been recorded as "queer" or "cracked." Again with the improvement of the asylums and the more humane treatment of insane, many cases receive official attention which formerly would have been privately cared for by friends and relations. A more careful selection is between papers and the insane also increases the inmates of the asylums. The longer life of the insane is also mentioned here, as well as the greater care in the keeping of public records.

Whether the conditions of modern life are making more people insane, or whether the insane are better preserved and more completely enrolled on the records, and how far the two factors are operative, will hardly be satisfactorily determined till much more is known about insanity than even the ablest experts know now. Indeed, the ablest experts are the most cautious when they discuss mental disease, and it is only the ignoramuses and the experts when they are getting fees on the witness stand who have positive opinions. That the problem is one of the most important which society will have to deal with in the coming generation is, however, undoubtedly true.

Three Sick Men.

It is a curious fact that three of the men who did most to revolutionize the world had always bad health. These were St. Paul, Julius Caesar and Marat, the real originator of the French revolution.

Fortune, what a jade you are to distribute your favors at haphazard as you do!—La Sage.

REFINED MALICE.

Reminiscence of a Notable Theatrical Performance.

Herbert Kelcey tells a story that establishes a new record for refined malice. The last previous mark was fixed by the Empress Josephine, who smilingly invited a rival beauty to sit beside her on a green sofa which absolutely killed the effect of the victim's blue gown.

The hero of Mr. Kelcey's tale of woe is a New York costumer who harbored a grudge against Lawrence Barrett. In the famous all star testimonial performance of "Hamlet" at the Metropolitan Opera House, Mr. Barrett was to play the ghost and Mr. Kelcey Bernardo.

Now, Barrett was taller in art than in inches, while Mr. Kelcey is a good six feet. The costumer provided Bernardo with a glittering Lohengrin suit of mail, with a dragon topped helmet of portentous altitude. The majesty of buried Denmark looked like a tin soldier, though if the audience could have measured him by the height of his passion he would have been colossal.

If Mr. Kelcey was holst with pride, however, he met with the proverbial fall. In the entire performance he had had only one line, announcing to the king the return of Hamlet. But the king was faking his lines and cut out the cue. After waiting all evening in his hardware shop, Mr. Kelcey was foiled.

That performance, given as a testimonial to one of the most artistic of American actor managers, Lester Wallack, was in fact a monumental example of the futility of all star casts. There were only three rehearsals, and Booth, who played Hamlet, foresaw the catastrophe, as appears in a letter he wrote to his daughter before it fell. He insisted on casting for Horatio an actor who was accustomed to play with him, and so saved his own bacon, if not the play of Shakespeare.

He was, however, the solitary survivor. Mr. Kelcey, whose sense of humor is delicious, is voluminous in anecdote of the fatalities. All the leading theaters in New York were closed in honor of the occasion, and the actors swelled the crowds on the stage to hundreds.

DeWolf Hopper wore a costume several sizes too small for him, and Marshall Wilder dragged about garments proportionately large. It was about the least successful effort either of them ever made to conceal the fact that they are born comedians. The stage, which was of the old kind, rolled backward at a terrific angle.

At the burial of Ophelia, as they were lowering Mme. Modjeska into her grave, Mr. Hopper sank to his knees and, wringing his hands, loudly moaned out: "Heaven help her! They're burying her on the side of a hill! They're burying her on the side of a hill!"—Saturday Evening Post.

The Champion Electric Sign.

The biggest electric sign in the world is hung on the western exposure of a building at Spring and Macdougal streets, New York. Flashing its light across the Hudson, this sign may be read miles away on the New Jersey side, and so deceptive are its dimensions to those in Jersey or the millions that cross the river by day and night that few realize the area over which the glittering letters are distributed. The initial "B" is sixty-eight feet high. This approximates the height of an ordinary five story building. The smaller letters completing the word are fifty feet high, each letter covering on a perpendicular line at least four ordinary stories. The letters are five feet wide, and a full grown man could almost tie down between the edges. About 1,400 electric lights are used for the illumination—this approximating the number of lights used in the entire illumination of many small towns. It requires practically all the time of one man to replace the burned out lamps, and it is interesting to watch him as he works upon his swinging scaffold, hundreds of feet in the air at times.—New York Post.

A New Problem.

It is reported that more than 1,000 Hindoos have crossed the Canadian border into the state of Washington recently and have become competitors in the labor market of the state. Men of their race, who present a strange and curious type to most Americans, may be seen at work now on the railroads of California. They are made conspicuous even at a distance by their turbans. A gang here and there makes an impression on the traveler without being noticeable because of its size. But there is a population of 294,361,000 in India, an area of 1,766,642 square miles, as against a population that is probably considerably less than 400,000,000 on an area of 1,532,420 square miles in China, and a population of 47,000,000 on an area of 147,655 square miles in Japan.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Vanishing Old London.

The "Old Curiosity Shop," in Portsmouth street, and other contiguous property leading into Lincoln's Inn Fields, are being demolished, the freehold having been sold, and a block of business premises will be erected. The quaint looking building, which has had a great fascination for American tourists, is said to be more than 300 years old, dating back to the early days of James I., but the fact has never been established that this was the "Old Curiosity Shop" immortalised by Dickens. The lucrative attraction of the name of the great humorist will therefore come to an end, but the tenants of the shop have received compensation and will carry on their printing business in Great Queen street.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A CLEVER BURGLAR.

How He Fooled a Man Who Thought He Couldn't Be Robbed.

"B. P. Hutchinson used to say no burglar ever could get into his house without waking him," said a central station detective the other day, according to the Chicago Record-Herald, "but it remained for Chief Simon O'Donnell to put one over the famous trader.

"You know, Mr. Hutchinson was famous in Chicago's commercial life years ago and was known popularly as 'Old Hutch.' He prided himself on the fact that burglars never had got into his house and often boasted of the fact to his intimates. One day while he was at lunch with Chief O'Donnell and a number of other friends the company fell to discussing a crime that had been committed the night before.

"'I'd like to see anybody get into my house,' Mr. Hutchinson said. 'Why, I hear every tick of the clock all night.'

"'I'll bet you a dinner for this crowd,' said the chief, 'that I can produce a man who will enter your house and you will not know of his visit till morning.'

"Mr. Hutchinson accepted the wager, and it was agreed that he was to let the chief have a latchkey, so that the burglar could get in without being disturbed by some patrolman. Mr. Hutchinson also agreed to leave some article of value in the parlor where it could be found readily. The chief said the robbery would be committed within the following week.

"Three days later Mr. Hutchinson awoke in the morning and discovered that both sheets of his bed, which had been in place when he retired, were gone. So was a little antique clock he had left on the mantel. He hurriedly dressed and hastened after breakfast to the chief's office. O'Donnell saw him coming and, as he entered the office, greeted him with:

"'Mr. Hutchinson, I have two sheets and a clock that belong to you. We will have the dinner today.'

"The burglary was done by a former criminal who at the time had reformed. He did the job at the request of the chief. How did he get the under sheet? He rolled Mr. Hutchinson over, rolled the sheet after him and then rolled him back."

ANIMAL ODDITIES.

The Australian water lizard walks erect.

The tree frogs of South America sing as musically as birds.

Sheep in time of famine eat the wool from one another's backs.

Gamecocks sometimes take to catching mice, which they devour greedily.

An eagle can live twenty-eight days without food, while a condor is said to be easily able to fast for forty days.

A decapitated snail kept in a moist place will, it is claimed, in a few weeks grow a new head quite as serviceable and good looking as that which was taken away.

The chameleon's eyes are situated in bony sockets projecting from the head. By this curious contrivance the peculiar little animal can see in any direction without the slightest motion save of the eye.

Ivory as a Tonic.

"Some physicians," said a druggist, "give an infusion of ground ivory and milk in the spring to stimulate and strengthen listless patients. It is a good remedy, for all I know to the contrary. Certainly it is an ancient one."

He opened a medical magazine and pointed to this quotation from Schroder's Zoology, a work published in 1637:

"Elephas (elephant)—His teeth are only used in medicine and vulgarly called ivory. The virtues: It cools and dryes, moderately binds cuts, strengthens the inward parts. It is good for the jaundice, it takes away pains and weakness of the stomach, it heals the epileptic, resists poysons, drives off spring melancholie. The dose is half a dram."

His Was Harder.

It was in a country tavern, where a newly arrived commercial traveler was holding forth.

"I'll bet my case of samples," he said, "that I've got the hardest name of anybody in this room."

An old farmer in the background shifted his feet. "Ye will, will ye?" he drawled. "Waal, I'll have to take ye up. I'll bet $10 against your samples that my name'll beat yourn."

"Done," cried the salesman. "I've got the hardest name. It is Stone."

The old man was game.

"Mine," he said, "is Harder."

Starting It Early.

Starting with his bride on their honeymoon, a man entered a railway office and, as always in the past, bought only one ticket.

The bride noticed the oversight at once.

"Why, you bought only one ticket, dear," she said.

"That's so, dear," he answered. "I forgot all about myself."—Tit-Bits.

An Expert Accountant.

"Do you not think, Miss Smiles," he pleaded, "that in time you might learn to love me?"

"Possibly," the girl replied. "If you could render me a statement of what you are worth, Mr. Giles, I might learn to love you. I'm very quick at figures."—London Mail.

The Test.

"Come in here, I wish to tell you a piece of gossip Mrs. Smith told me."

"Is it good?"

"Is it? I had to promise not to tell a soul before she would tell me."—Houston Post.

The easiest thing in the world is to make mistakes. The hardest is to profit by them.—Stouffville Banner.

Britain Rebuffed at Hague Conference

The Hague, Sept. 27.—Great Britain received a serious rebuff at a private gathering of the delegates to peace conference held here yesterday to discuss the abolition of contraband. The meeting was convoked by Sir Edward Fry, head of the British delegation. Three months ago Great Britain presented a proposition regarding the abolition of contraband to which twenty-five countries expressed their adherence. Yesterday Sir Edward invited the delegates of these twenty-five countries to attend the meeting last night with a view of agreeing on a convention abolishing contraband, adding that the United States had abandoned the principle of conditional contraband.

M. Morey Von Kapos-More, of Austria, objected, saying that the instructions given the delegates referred only to questions to be adopted by the conference unanimously. All the delegates present with the exception of the Haitien representative, opposed Sir Edward Fry, and the British proposition was ultimately rejected.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO

Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 50 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

"Not unless I should happen to marry a rich man. Poor girls like me have sometimes done that, haven't they?" was Maddy's demure reply.

Grandpa Markham shook his head. "They have, but it's mostly their ruination; so don't build castles in the air about this Guy Remington."

"Me! Oh, grandpa, I never dreamed of Mr. Guy'" and Madeline blushed half indignantly. "He's too rich, too aristocratic, though Sarah said he didn't act one bit proud, and was so pleasant, the servants all worship him, and Mrs. Noah thinks him good enough for the Queen of England. I shall think so, too, if he lets you have the money. How I wish it was Monday night, so we could know sure!"

"Perhaps we both shall be terribly disappointed," suggested grandpa, but Maddy was more hopeful.

She, at least, would not fail, while what she had heard of Guy Remington, the heir of Aikenside, made her believe that he would accede at once to her grandpa's request.

All that night she was working to pay the debt, giving the money herself into the hands of Guy Remington, whom she had never seen, but who came up in her dreams the tall, handsome-looking man she had so often heard described by Sarah Jones after her return from Aikenside. Even the next day, when, by her grandparent's side, Maddy knelt reverently in the small, timeworn church at Honedale, her thoughts, it must be confessed, were wandering more to the to-morrow and Aikenside, than to the sacred words her lips were uttering. She knew it was wrong, and with a nervous start would try to bring her mind back from decimal fractions to what the minister was saying; but Maddy was mortal, and right in the midst of the Collect, Aikenside and its owner would rise before her, together with the wonder how she and her grandfather would feel one week from that Sabbath day. Would the desired certificate be hers? or would she be disgraced for ever and ever by a rejection? Would the mortgage be paid and her grandfather at ease, or would his heart be breaking with the knowing he must leave what had been his home for so many years? Not thus was it with the aged disciple beside her—the good old man, whose white locks swept the large-lettered book over which his wrinkled face was bent, as he joined in the responses, or said the prayers whose words had over him so soothing an influence, carrying his thoughts upward to the house not made with hands, which he felt assured would one day be his. Once or twice, it is true, thoughts of losing the dear old red cottage flitted across his mind with a keen, sudden pang, but he put it quickly aside, remembering at the same instant how the Father he loved doeth all things well to such as are His children.

Grandpa Markham was old in the Christian course, while Maddy could hardly be said to have commenced as yet, and so to her that April Sunday was long and wearisome. How she did wish she might just look over the geography, by way of refreshing her memory, or see exactly how the rule for extracting the cube root did read, but Maddy forbore, reading only the Pilgrim's Progress, the Bible, and the book brought from the Sunday school.

With the earliest dawn, however, she was up, and her grandmother heard her repeating to herself much of what she dreaded Dr. Holbrook might question her upon. Even when bending over the washtub, for there were no servants at the red cottage, a book was arranged before her, so that she could study with her eyes, while her small, fat hands and dimpled arms were busy in the suds. Before ten o'clock everything was done, the clothes, white as the snowdrops in the garden beds, were swinging on the line, the kitchen floor was scrubbed, the windows washed, the best room swept, the vegetables cleaned for dinner, and then Maddy's work was finished. "Grandma could do all the rest," she said, and Madeline was free "to put her eyes out over them big books if she liked."

Swiftly flew the hours until it was time to be getting ready, when again the short hair was deplored, as before her looking-glass Madeline brushed and arranged her shining, beautiful locks. Would Dr. Holbrook think of her age? Suppose he should ask it. But no, he wouldn't. If Mr. Green thought her old enough, surely it was not a matter with which the doctor need trouble himself; and somewhat at ease on that point, Madeline donned her longest frock, and, standing on a chair, tried to discover how much of her pantalets was visible.

"I could see splendidly in Mr. Remington's mirrors," she said to herself, with a half-sigh of regret that her lot had not been cast in some such place as Aikenside, instead of there beneath the hill in that wee bit of a cottage whose rear slanted back until it almost touched the ground. "After all, I guess I'm happier here," she thought. "Everybody likes me, while if I were Mr. Guy's sister and lived at Aikenside, I might be proud and wicked, and——"

She did not finish the sentence, but somehow the story of Dives and Lazarus, read by her grandfather that morning, recurred to her mind, and feeling how much rather she would rest in Abraham's bosom than share the fate of him who once was clothed in purple and fine linen, she pinned on her little neat plaid shawl, and, tying the blue ribbons of her coarse straw hat, glanced once more at the formidable cube root, and then hurried down to where her grandfather and old Sorrel were waiting for her.

"I shall be so happy when I come back, because it will then be over, just like having a tooth out, you know," she said to her grandmother, who bent down for the good-by kiss without which Maddy never left her. "Now, grandpa, drive on; I was to be there at three," and chirruping herself to Sorrel, the impatient Madge went riding from the cottage door, chatting cheerily until the village of Devonshire was reached; then, with a farewell to her grandfather, who never dreamed that the man whom he was seeking was so near, she tripped up the flagging walk, and, as we have seen, soon found in the presence of not only Dr. Holbrook, but also of Guy Remington.

Poor, poor little Madge!

CHAPTER III.

It was Guy who received her, Guy who pointed to a chair, Guy who seemed perfectly at home, and, naturally enough, she took him for Dr. Holbrook, wondering who the other black-haired man could be, and if he meant to stay in there all the while. It would be very dreadful if he did, and in her agitation and excitement the cube root was in danger of being altogether forgotten. Half guessing the cause of her uneasiness, and feeling more averse than ever to taking part in the matter, the doctor, after a hasty survey of her person, withdrew into the background, and sat where he could not be seen. This brought the short dress into full view, together with the dainty little foot, nervously beating the floor.

"She's very young," he thought, 'too young, by far," and Maddy's chances of success were beginning to decline even before a word had been spoken.

How terribly still it was for the time during which telegraphic communications were silently passing between Guy and the doctor; the latter shaking his head decidedly, while the former insisted that he should do his duty. Madeline could almost hear the beatings of her heart, and only by counting and recounting the poplar trees growing across the street could she keep back the tears. What was he waiting for, she wondered and, at last, summoning all her courage, she lifted her great brown eyes to Guy, and said, pleadingly:

"Would you be so kind, sir, as to begin?"

"Yes, certainly," and electrified by that young, bird-like voice, the sweetest save one he had ever heard, Guy knocked down from the pile of books the only one at all appropriate to the occasion, the others being as far beyond what was taught in the district schools as his classical education was beyond Madeline's common one.

LONDON ROWDIES.

The Way They Terrorized the Citizens in the Old Days.

Some curious particulars of the dangers of London streets in the old days are given in an article on "The Scowrers and the Mohocks" in the British Monthly Review. The favorite practice of the Scowrers was to invade some tavern in the evening, drive out the customers, ill treat the proprietor and his attendants, wreck the premises and, above all, "roar." Steele tells of the Mohocks, one of whose pastimes was to "inclose women in casks and roll them down the street." In 1712 a royal proclamation was issued offering a reward of £100 for the apprehension of any Mohock. Soon after the accession of George IV. to the throne in 1820 there was a recrudescence, though in a milder form, of Mohock rowdyism, and attacks on the watch—"boxing the Charlies," as the phrase went—once more became fashionable among the wilder spirits of London. These revelries, however, were rudely disturbed by the establishment in 1829 by Sir Robert Peel of an efficient body of police.

Yet again in early Victorian days there was another Mohock outburst under the auspices of the Marquis of Waterford, and once more knockers and bell handles were wrenched off, public monuments injured, lights extinguished and crockery smashed. This form of humor, however, was quite wasted upon the local authorities, the marquis being promptly knocked down by a watchman and taken up half dead. The same authority tells us that in the following year he and some other men of fashion were convicted at Derby assizes of trying to overturn a caravan, screwing up a toll barkeeper and painting houses and people red. For these recreations they were fined £100 apiece.

MODERN FAIRYLAND.

Electricity More Potent Than Aladdin's Famous Lamp.

Was Aladdin's lamp so very wonderful? Today we touch a button when a messenger is needed; we press another, and the room is flooded with light. It is not recorded that Aladdin's old brass implement was of any value for illuminating a dark room. Our slaves of the lamp do not terrify us by their horrid appearance. They are placed afar off in a home of their own and are always ready to furnish us with light and heat at any time of the day or night. Is not that simplicity and more direct than to have to carry an ugly piece of brass about with us, which when rubbed did not give what was wanted, but merely brought the servant?

And was the magic mirror so much superior to the telephone? Who would not prefer to talk with his friends to merely seeing them dimly through a clouded mirror? Truly the telephone is one of the most romantic devices that has ever rewarded man's endeavors. And yet the magic mirror, while it seems improbable, may lead to it, but even then it would only supplement the telephone.

And in what way was the fairy boat or coach superior to the electric launch or automobile? True, the rider did not know how or why it moved, but this same advantage holds for many who today use these very equipages. And one can easily believe that we are not far from the true flying machine.—Electrical Review.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn back growths back to flesh again. That is impossible, but I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmestadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. With that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, I unhesitatingly can say all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. These small, little granules of wafer, found in Rheumatic Blood action, dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the stomach, etc.

A weak stomach causing dyspepsia, a weak heart with palpitation or intermittent pulse, always means weak stomach nerves or weak heart nerves. Strengthen these inside or controlling nerves with Dr. Shoop's Restorative and see how quickly these ailments disappear. Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis., will mail samples free. Write for them. Bank of Goldfield, Nevada.

This company owns a claim (80 acres) of some of the best proven mining land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Cloud, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles south of the Consolidated and about two and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bond and Daisy Mines near the Zeo group in the Diamondfield section, second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which was an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and cut by several cross cuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the great profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

A Woman's Suffering

Consultations With Doctors and Specialists Gave But Little Relief.

Halifax, N.S., Sept 30.—Mrs. R J Rawlings, of 12 Argyle street, gives the following statement which should be of interest to every reader. "No one could know what I have suffered with torturing headaches, faint feeling, and lassitude. In the mornings I was scarcely able to do my work and when night came I felt too miserable to sleep. The doctors did me little good, so I decided to buy Dr. Hamilton's Pills about which I have heard so much good. In a week I improved. My headaches were less severe, my appetite increased, and faintness passed away. Day by day I gained strength, and increased in weight. The trouble I am sure was in my stomach, and Dr. Hamilton's Pills did what was necessary. I used twenty boxes and in consequence will live twenty years longer."

Just what prescription for every tired, ailing woman,—try Dr. Hamilton's Pills and see if this isn't so. Sold by all dealers, 25c. per box.

WOMEN AS PHOTOGRAPHERS.

Why They Do Not Succeed In Their Profession.

It seems strange that so few women succeed as photographers, for women prefer to go to their own sex to be photographed rather than to an obviously "professional" man whose attentions remind them uncomfortably of those of a dentist.

The trouble with the feminine photographer is that she endeavors to be too artistic, at the expense of the wishes of her patrons. People get their pictures taken because they desire a likeness, and they do not relish an impressionistic portrait vanishing into the shadow. Furthermore, she disregards her subjects' individuality. She should first of all try to find out how they imagine they look a very different thing from their actual appearance—and then strive to attain that ideal. She must somehow make a nervous, dishevaled, unattractive woman a miracle of charm, and all without such gross flattery as to cause suspicion.

None of the other feminine arts will come amiss in her makeup. She must know just what clothes and what alterations in the dress will work the transformation, and she must in a way play the hostess and put her subject at her ease.

It is difficult art, but those who do succeed find that in every way they are repaid for the trouble it took them to reach their present status. And the best of all is that the overaesthetic photographer will find that by suppressing her early "artistic" tendencies she has arrived at that true art which is only expressed in simplicity and naturalness.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

To shine boots quickly do not blacken, but rub with a piece of an orange. Let the juice dry in, then polish with a soft brush, when they will shine like a mirror.

A good method of washing windows is to take two or three pieces of lump starch, dissolve in the water and wash windows with the same. Let it dry and polish with a dry cloth.

Common tray cloths may be made from worn out tablecloths by cutting the desired size from the strongest parts and folding a hem one and one-half inches wide with miter corners.

One of the best remedies for removing corns is turpentine. Touch the corn every night before retiring with a little turpentine. It will come out in a very short time. Apply the turpentine with a toothpick.

Best Ways to Wind Wool.

Wool for knitting or crocheting should never be wound very tightly into a hard ball, as this makes it thin and poor. Some good knitters merely unwind the skein into a soft heap, but this method is only possible where there is no fear of entanglement, as if the heap of wool be disturbed it soon gets into a hopeless tangle. A better plan is to wind the wool over three or four fingers of the left hand held outside the ball. These fingers should be gently withdrawn at frequent intervals to change the position of the ball. Wool thus wound is always soft and full of thread.

A Fashionable Gem.

Of the minor gems of which the smartly gowned woman now makes much there is a translucent green stone known as amazonite. It is of vivid and yet a soft green and purposely is worn on a platinum chain to look as if detached and to make a bright center of color on a white blouse. Rose quartz is another of the same kind used for necklace ornaments and hat pins.

ENGAGED ON SIGHT.

The Story of a Bright, Up to Date Office Boy.

He was a freckled faced, foxy looking boy of thirteen or fourteen and not more than about half as big as he ought to be, but he was wiry and his eyes were clear. The proprietor of the store was in his office when the boy entered.

"Do you want a boy here?" asked the youngster with confidence.

"What do I want with a boy?" replied the proprietor with an intent to have fun with his visitor.

"I don't know," was the unabashed response. "I guess they have boys around stores sometimes, and I thought you might want one."

"Well, since you have mentioned it, I do."

"What kind of a boy do you want?" The proprietor looked him over with a more or less suspicious eye.

"I want a good boy," he said slowly.

"Then I won't do," said the youngster.

"Why won't you? Are you a bad boy?"

"Um—um—er," hesitated the caller. "I'm just a boy, that's all. There's something wrong with 'em when they're good."

He started out, when the proprietor called him back.

"Hold on," he said. "Maybe you are what I want."

"If you want a good thing, I'm it," said the boy, "and you won't have to push me along, either."

"How much do you want?"

"I want a million, but I'll take $3 a week."

"When can you begin?"

"This very minute if you'll give me my supper. I haven't had anything to eat for three weeks."

"Nothing to eat for three weeks!" exclaimed the proprietor.

"Nothing fit. I've scraped along as I could, but I haven't had a square meal, with pie on the side."

"All right. You shall have your supper. And where will you sleep?"

"Oh, I won't sleep at all. I'm going to stay awake of nights when I ain't busy so's I can feel how good it is to have a job and got money in my clothes. Hully gee, there's a kid out there trying to get away with a piece of lead pipe. Let me crack him once." And the new employee dashed out after the offender.—Washington Star.

He Knew His Business.

The colored man who was fishing in the river at Mobile had just one poor little fish to show for his catch, and as he held it up to view I hoped him better luck next time.

"Dat's all right, white man," he replied as he put the fish in his pocket. "It don't weigh ober fo' ounces, an' I'se spent de hull afternoon, but wid dat fish in my hand I kin go home an' make de old woman believe that one weighin' ten pounds dun got off my hook an' will be waitin' round fur me tomorrer!"

"I got a box of matches," said the old colored brother, "en ef I des had a load er wood I could make a fire, en ef I des had a side er meat en a sack er flour I could cook it on dat fire, en after I cooked it dey ain't no question but what I could eat it, kaze all I got at de present time is a empty house en a all perwadin' appetite."—Atlanta Constitution.

Finding the Way.

"I will win her yet!" he cried, with determination. "I love her, and love will find a way."

Of course he was clearly behind the times. Love can still occasionally find a way, but it isn't anything like so quick and good a pathfinder as money, and as usual it reached the citadel somewhat late.—Chicago Post.

The Modesty of Women

Naturally makes them shrink from the indelicate questions, the obnoxious examinations, and unpleasant local treatments, which some physicians consider essential in the treatment of diseases of women. Yet, if help can be had, it is better to submit to this ordeal than let the disease grow and spread. The trouble is that so often the woman undergoes all the annoyance and shame for nothing. Thousands of women who have been cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription write in appreciation of the cure which dispenses with the examinations and local treatments. There is no other medicine so sure and safe for delicate women as "Favorite Prescription." It cures debilitating drains, irregularity and female weakness. It always helps. It almost always cures. It is strictly non-alcoholic, non-secret, all its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper; contains no deleterious or habit-forming drugs, and every native medicinal root entering into its composition has the full endorsement of those most eminent in the several schools of medical practice. Some of these numerous and strongest of professional endorsements of its ingredients, will be found in a pamphlet wrapped around the bottle, also in a booklet mailed free on request, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. These professional endorsements should have far more weight than any amount of the ordinary lay, or non-professional testimonials.

The most intelligent women now-a-days insist on knowing what they take as medicine instead of opening their mouths like a lot of young birds and gulping down whatever is offered them. "Favorite Prescription" is of KNOWN COMPOSITION. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 21 one-cent stamps for paper-covered, or 50 stamps for cloth-bound.

If sick consult the Doctor, free of charge by letter. All such communications are held sacredly confidential.

Fall Assizes of High Court of Justice Opened Yesterday

The fall assizes of the High Court of Justice for the County of Peterborough, opened at the court house yesterday afternoon at one o'clock.

The docket this season is light, there being only three cases, two civil and one criminal action. The civil cases are Moore vs. the Canadian General Electric Co., and McGrohan vs. Kelly, particulars of which have already been published, and the criminal case is that of Herbert Meehan, described elsewhere in this issue.

The members of the bar present were Messrs. D. O'Connell, R. F. McWilliams, G. N. Gordon, A. D. Langley, Lakefield, F. D. Kerr, E. L. Goodwill, and N. F. Patterson. Crown prosecutor, of Owen Sound.

In his address to the grand jury, the presiding justice said it was a matter of congratulation that there were so few cases.

The fact that there was only one criminal case was particularly gratifying. The bulk of criminal cases, he said, were now disposed of without a jury, being dealt with by police magistrates and by the county judge. However, in a county of the population of Peterborough, one might expect more cases of this nature. Usually, serious cases of this kind had to come before a jury and there was one on the docket for the present assizes. The seriousness of the crime of rape was enlarged upon by the presiding justice, who outlined the case of Payne vs. Meehan in detail, and informed the jury that it was their duty to find whether the evidence justified a true bill being brought in against the prisoner.

Regarding conditions at the county jail, Justice Magee, said he had been informed that there were nine prisoners under sentence there at the present time. Of these, seven had been committed on the charge of vagrancy. The fact that there should be such little criminality, was commented upon.

The grand jury were also instructed regarding their duties as to inspecting the public institutions.

The first case called was that of Moore vs. the Canadian General Electric Company, in which the plaintiff is suing the company for $2,000 for injuries sustained while in the employ of the defendants.

Herbert Mehin was Remanded

Yesterday's assizes opened when the second case brought before the presiding justice, was that of Herbert Mehin, whom it will be remembered was charged with the rape of Mary Payne, some months ago, and who was tried before the police magistrate and remanded, on bail, for trial at the fall assizes. It will be further remembered, it was alleged at the original hearing at the police court, by the girl in question that she met Mehin by accident at the corner of Charlotte and George streets, after she had missed a young man she had an engagement with that evening to attend the opera house. Her story as told in the police court, was that Mehin offered to take her home to her father's residence near the G.T.R. Co., but that he and she wandered out to the northern part of the city, after leaving the corner of Park and Charlotte streets, where she said the crime was committed.

Mehin, the accused, was promptly let out on bail, and was on hand yesterday. However, the complainant, the Payne girl, seemed to have left town so that the case was enlarged until the spring assizes. Mehin was allowed to go, pending the spring trial on the same bail as heretofore. It looks as though the complainant may not appear at the spring assizes, and that the case may be discharged. In fact The Times yesterday ascertained facts that this case will never be tried and that the Payne girl will not appear against him at the spring assizes. The inference is obvious.

Why Should a Young Man Join The Canadian Club?

The Canadian Club movement which today girdles the earth, and links Canadians in every zone, was originated by Mr. Charles McCullough of Hamilton. People and founder, though he is, little could he foresee the magnitude or power the institution was destined to attain. Already Canada owes to "The Spirit of the Canadian Club" a debt which can never be paid.

Why has the Canadian Club achieved such brilliant success? Why is it growing so rapidly in influence? Why should ambitious young men become members in Peterboro, or anywhere else? These questions are due.

Because the institution is patriotic, its fundamental purpose is to further the interests of Canada. From its birth there has throbbed in it a sense of the greatness of our country's destiny. Every man touched with its ides, feels that it is worth while. It looks far ahead, and seeks to give shape and worth to what is to be. Canada's greatness is its constant aim. What can be done to make our native land first in all that is enduring? That is its thought. National development is the first consideration. Commercial and industrial interests, railways, waterways, finance, insurance, mining, lumber, stocks, cheese and everything else that touches the material resources of the country are considered; but these things are not all, nor chief.

What stands first? Always the higher interests; the educational development and moral fibre of the citizen, i.e., the type of manhood that our country needs.

This brings us to a second reason why young men should join the club and stick to it. It is a great educational institution. Its speakers deal with innumerable subjects. Always brightly. This is part of the interest. Always intelligently. Only able men are invited. The meetings are short. The speakers experts. The "lessons" easy to take. And because related to the living interests of the day, they become strongly formative in one's character and thinking. Religion, like politics, are supposed to be excluded, yet Bishops and Archbishops and the greatest politicians of the world address our clubs.

Another reason is the personal factor. No man can develop personality without contact with others. The social power in the shaping and toning of manhood is of inspiration of a man. The strong man who stands out as a type of attractive character, is worth very much to a community. Put him in bank or school, pulpit or workship, and he helps men. To come under the power of great personality often gives uplift and direction and momentum to life.

In the Canadian Club this type of influence will be found in two different ways. In the prominent men who come as speakers and also by association with fellow-members. Everywhere the club has appealed to the leaders of men, drawing into its membership the most distinguished men in our cities. By joining the club one has contact with the living forces of the day, and forms friendships which must be of lasting worth.

So ambitious young man can afford to ignore the Canadian Club. It means profit for the present. It means power for the future. And every meeting tells on the destiny of our native land.

GREAT BRITAIN'S FIRST LINE OF DEFENCE

Plans for Manoeuvres of Home, Atlantic and Channel Fleets--Naval Attaches not Invited--Japan Alone will Send Representatives.

London, Oct. 1.—Under the supreme command of Lord Charles Beresford the combined Home, Atlantic and Channel fleets will leave Portland about October 14 for the autumn manoeuvres which are being conducted in the North Sea this year, and will be somewhat similar to those held in the spring off the coast of Portugal. The greatest interest is being taken in this gathering of Britain's first line of defence, for while the usual fleet manoeuvres and exercises will be carried out, the main object, it is believed, is strategical, to teach the officers what the admiralty would expect of them in case of war with Germany. The program is being kept a strict secret, and journalists will not be invited to accompany the ships. The naval attaches have not been given information, and will not be present, except the Japanese, who as Great Britain's allies have in recent years figured in the guests of the officers in command on occasions of the kind.

NINE ADMIRALS TO ATTEND.

Lord Charles Beresford will be accompanied by no less than nine admirals, and the big ships of his fleet will include 25 battleships, 11 armored cruisers and 10 protected cruisers, with a fleet of smaller vessels, including torpedo boats, destroyers, numbering over sixty.

The meeting of the fleets and so many officers is also to be taken advantage of to test the suitability of Cromarty, on Moray Firth, as a place of anchorage for big ships and its eventual adoption as an auxiliary base to that being developed at Rosyth, on the Firth of Forth.

Try to Quash Midland's Local Option

Toronto, Oct. 1.—Before the Court of Appeal at Osgoode Hall yesterday, J. B. Mackenzie moved to reverse the judgment of the Divisional Court and quash the local option bylaw in the town of Midland.

Originally Chief Justice Mulock made an order quashing the bylaw, but the Division reversed him.

Mr. Mackenzie's chief ground of attack was that the town council had been too hasty in giving the bylaw its formal third reading. The law provides that two weeks shall elapse between the vote of the electors and the third reading by council in order to give time for a petition for a scrutiny. The council allowed six days for that.

"Let them repeal it, and I'll be satisfied," offered Mr. Mackenzie.

"And then they'll pass another," replied Judge Meredith.

"I'll meet that emergency when it comes."

"You have an action at law if anything has been illegally done," said the judge.

"But what good would that do? It would not secure a license for any former license-holder."

"But he would get damages.

"The license commissioners have to in their discretion to grant or refuse licenses," asserted Mr. Mackenzie.

"But they have not the discretion to take no heed of the law," returned the judge.

"They have to give a reason, of course, for refusing a license," admitted the lawyer, "but this would be their reason."

He took exception to the judgement of Judge Riddell, who sat in the Divisional Court.

"If his judgement is accepted the electors of Midland will never know whether that bylaw is properly carried or not," he declared.

"Now, that we have heard your points we might hear from Mr. Hodgins," hinted Chief Justice Moss, and after citing several other objections, Mr. Mackenzie sat down.

Mr. Frank Hodgins, K.C., for the town of Midland, agreed that it could be easily shown whether the bylaw had been given the necessary three-fifths vote, and if it had not it would be void.

"And if the clerk made a mistake in adding the figures, and it was shown the bylaw was not properly carried, it would be void," said Judge Maclaren.

Mr. Mackenzie rose again.

"I think Mr. Hodgins should join me in this motion."

"But he has not," put in the chief justice, cutting him off.

Judgment was reserved.

A Fine Proposition

One That is Likely to be a Bonanza for the Stockholders

The Pittsburg-Idaho Mining and Milling Company's property is located in the Lo Lo district of Idaho, and adjoins the Coeur d'Alene district on the south. The Kootenai, Coeur d'Alene and Lo Lo districts form what is known as the "panhandle" of Idaho. It is claimed by the Coeur d'Alene people—and there seems to be good reason for the claim—that for every dollar put into its mines 422 has been taken out.

It is the belief of many people that for its great extent, the "panhandle" of Idaho is the richest piece of ground in the world.

In the Kootnai district the production is largely silver and lead. In the Coeur d'Alene it is copper, silver and lead, while in the Lo Lo it is gold, silver and copper.

The Lo Lo district is the youngest of the three, and while it is well mineralized generally there are not as many developing mines as in the other districts.

"There are, or a dozen mines in course of development that have passed the prospective stage and warrants them in operation from a mining standpoint. Most of these are close corporations. Among them we might name the following.

The Phillips and Williams Company are arranging to install a reduction plant in the near future. They have ore running from $12.50 to $200 a ton in gold, silver and copper and, from present appearances will have a good production.

The Alta-Idaho Mining Company is a Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania company, with its property in an advanced stage of development with ore running to $100 in value. This company is also preparing to install a reduction plant and machinery in the near future.

The New England-Idaho Company has its property well explored by shafts and tunnels driven several hundred feet disclosing a fine ore body of chalcopyrite and bornite copper, with good ore exposed in other parts of the mine. This company is controlled by Boston capitalists and are also getting ready to install machinery for the successful working of its mines.

The State of Idaho Mining Company is controlled by Indianapolis people. This company has four well defined veins traversing its property, all more or less developed with tunnels, shafts and open cuts. The bodies of both high and low grade and considerable extent are opened and like the other companies named is arranging for machinery to operate on a large scale.

The Laugherty and Renshaw Company has a well developed property with two tunnels and a number of shafts and open cuts showing high-grade ore in every one of them. This property is making a splendid showing for the small amount of work done. There is a strong probability that some Butte capitalists will become interested in this property.

Some of these companies, however, have advanced with development as has the Pittsburg-Idaho Mining and Milling Company. This company is being promoted and developed by the Sour Lawrety Brothers, who are all practical miners of long experience. It has 80 acres in one compact body with a parallel and cross veins running through the property. These veins are from 200 to 500 feet wide. On of the veins can be traced through the company holdings for more than 2000 feet while another is exposed at more than 1000 feet. The mine is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, opening up and blocking out large bodies of good ore. The working tunnel has been driven into the mountain about 1400 feet and it has opened up some remarkable ore bodies on three of the veins ready for a good production just as soon as a complete reduction and operating plant can be provided. A block of the treasury stock is now being sold for that purpose.

The ore in the Big Four vein is a Silica sulphide of chalcopyrite and bornite copper from the grass roots and averages about $70 per ton while the ore bodies in tunnel No. 1, is an oxide and carbonate running $12.50 to $15 per ton.

The Lo Lo district will soon take its place among the big mining districts of the world.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co. of this city are authorized agents for the sale of the stock of the Pittsburg-Idaho Mining and Milling Co., and are prepared for them a very successful sale.

In regard to the petition for running street cars in London on the Sabbath, the Lord's Day Alliance has not been idle. Yesterday counter petitions were placed in nearly all the churches, and were signed by many who are opposed to the innovation, which, they claim, is unnecessary, and would prove detrimental to the moral welfare of the city.

Coal Barons Advance Prices To-day---Will Now be $7.50 a Ton

It seems that the local coal barons, who, to be candid, are not much more grasping, than their fellow plutocrats elsewhere, want still another pound of flesh or, to be more exact, more money on the black diamonds that are essential to the life, let alone comfort, of the poor, as well as the rich in this city. Yesterday those using coal, and they are in the majority could get this necessary commodity for $7.30 per ton, today our long suffering, and highly taxed citizens will have to pay $7.50.

Some local dealers now threaten to put prices up further still. Last year, the highest quotation for coal in Peterborough was $7.30 per ton; the year before it was $7.50, and today it will again reach that figure.

The dealers say that they are not making money selling at $7.30, and should be getting $8, they claim that hay is very high in price and that they have to pay more for their accommodation at the barns, in short, the cost of everything has advanced.

Well! well! these explanations may have a certain amount of foundation, but why does Peterborough have to pay more than some other places if there is not a combination between certain dealers?

Half a Century of Wedded Life

Yesterday was the 49th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. Edward Green, 326 Water street, to Miss M. Green, 326 Water street, to Miss M. A. Mitchell, daughter of Capt. Mitchell of Emily. This ceremony of nearly half a century ago was performed by the late Rev. W. D. Roger, former pastor of St. Paul's church. Mr. Green is now 81 years of age. When he first came to Peterborough, the present thriving city was a hamlet of only about half a thousand souls.

More Good Work by the Bell Co.

The Bell Telephone Co., with their usual aggressive attitude both in the interests of their patrons and the general public have decided to add to the work now in progress, whereby the old unsightly overhead wires and cables will soon be buried. Their latest move here is to connect all possible subscribers, especially in central parts of the city from the rear lanes and alleyways, instead of wiring them up from the front.

Board of Trade Meets Oct. 8

The first fall meeting of the Peterborough Board of Trade, will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 8th, in the City Council chamber. Among other matters that will be discussed will be the present mode of assessment. The citizens are asked to turn out to this meeting and express their views on a question that is at present a matter of serious consideration by every ratepayer.

A CHANCE FOR YOU

A strong company of influential business men is being formed in Toronto to manufacture the new "HELION" INCANDESCENT ELECTRIC LAMP, which we learn from reports in many recent publications, uses only one-third the current or gives three times the light of the ordinary electric lamp now in general use, millions of which are used annually in Canada. It does not require a very vivid imagination to imagine how the public will welcome this wonderful money-saving electric lamp. We look upon this as a particularly interesting and inviting investment for the public, which needs neither boosting nor boasting, for it we hear rightly the probable profits are unusually large. We believe that shrewd investors will find something here of rare merit and genuine worth, which will bear the closest scrutiny of experts.

In spite of the tight Money Market, which from present advice is becoming easier almost immediately wise business men, who know, have been sending in their subscriptions, and we are of the opinion that such subscriptions will continue to come in rapidly until the present offering of stock is fully subscribed.

You will do well to investigate and Mr. Campbell who is in charge of the company's affairs, has intimated to us that a post card from any of our readers will bring a prospectus and full particulars by return of mail.

A Pretty Wedding In the Cathedral

Mr. P. J. O'Brien and Miss Sylvia Morgan United

Yesterday morning St. Peter's cathedral was the scene of a pretty wedding, when Miss Sylvia Morgan, daughter of the late Wm. Morgan, Otonabee, was united in marriage to Mr. Patrick J. O'Brien of Elyria, Ohio. The ceremony being performed by Rev. Dr. O'Brien.

The bride, leaning on the arm of her brother-in-law, Mr. John Duignan, entered the church. She was charmingly attired in a travelling suit of blue Sarotoy cloth, with ball trimmings, and wore a blue hat, trimmed with sunset roses. The bridesmaid was Miss Mary O'Brien, of Toronto, sister of the groom. The groom was supported by Mr. Will O'Brien, nephew of the bride. During the service, Miss Pearl Morgan, niece of the bride, sang "Come Unto Me," very effectively.

After the ceremony the bridal party drove to the residence of Mr. John Duignan, 209 Dalhousie street, where the guests enjoyed a sumptuous wedding repast served by Mr. T. Hooper. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien left on the 11.45 G.T.R. transit for Toronto, where they will spend a few weeks, prior to leaving for their home in Elyria, Ohio.

Belt Lost Near Opera House

On Thursday night as Mrs. Dodds was getting off a George street car at King street on her way to attend the opera house performance she had the misfortune to drop a lady's belt with a pearl buckle. A street car conductor fortunately saw the article drop, and has given Mr. Dodds a personal description of the party acquiring it. It will save legal complications among this party return the belt at once to the Times office, as otherwise the description of this party will be furnished to the chief of police. There is quite a difference between finding an article and returning the same and picking such up and keeping or giving it away.

Adj. and Mrs. Wiggins Leave Next Week

On Sunday one of the most generally popular chief officials that the local corps of the Salvation Army, Adjutant Wiggins, together with his good wife, will be the main factors to a farewell reception tendered them at the Simcoe street barracks. Adjutant Wiggins has been in Peterborough for the past year and during that time has been very successful in his work. He regrets leaving. He came to the city from Halifax, N.S. The adjutant has been engaged in the work of an officer of the army for over twenty years, and is a most popular and efficient officer.

Coffee is a hidden but powerful enemy to clear progress in life. Its subtle, nerve poison, weakens heart, interferes with digestion and has a definite and destructive effect on the nervous system. People who are content to load themselves with impediments to progress, who refuse to supply body with food and drink of the kind needed to make up for the daily disintegration of nerve and brain tissue, must stand aside in the race for pre-eminence.

The ones who are properly fed, will surely win the laurels.

Postum furnishes the gluten and phosphates of grain needed by nature to nourish brain and nerves with food. When made right, that is, boiled 15 minutes after boiling begins, it has a delicious taste similar to the mild, high-grade Javas, but with none of the bad effects of coffee.

There are those who are entirely careless as to what goes into the stomach, but the one who would make all his manoeuvres tend towards health and possible greatness can know by a personal test.

THANKSGIVING DAY

For some years past there has been more or less controversy regarding the fixing of the day and date on which Thanksgiving should be held, and the matter is not yet definitely settled. The feeling seems to be growing that Monday is preferable to Thursday and there are many arguments in favor of the change. Thanksgiving day is properly a time when families should be united, and in this country of long distances few people can go to their homes for one day in the middle of the week, whereas they could do so if they had from Saturday until Tuesday morning.

The lateness in announcing the date this year, Thursday, October 31, does not give farmers, fruit-growers, merchants and others sufficient time to make proper preparations to have ample supplies of their products in the best condition.

Thanksgiving day should be a fixed holiday, say the last Monday in October, and steps should be taken forthwith to make it so.

A NEW RAILWAY PROJECT

To construct a railway which will penetrate a country as yet absolutely undeveloped, reaching from Dawson City to Edmonton, an approximate distance of 1,400 miles, is said to be the latest project to come to the fore in the history of railway progress. The promoters, it is stated, are on the way to New York in order to obtain the assurance of sufficient capital which they expect will be contributed entirely by the monied men of English financial centers. Within two weeks time they will ask the Dominion Government to make endorsation of the bonds. If successful, another year will see the beginning of operations in the building of a railway line which will ultimately bring the farthest corner of the Yukon within fourteen days communication of the British Isles and Continental Europe. The proposed route of the line will cut through the Stewart River Country, thence across the mountains, and down to Edmonton, through a piece of country that is claimed to be exceedingly fertile through this latter seven hundred miles. It is claimed that with the present rate of immigration and advancement of agricultural interests a railway line would be self-supporting from the moment it would be placed in operation.

Stomach troubles, heart and kidney ailments, can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its Restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the stomach, etc.

A weak stomach causing dyspepsia, a weak heart with palpitation or intermittent pulse, always means weak stomach nerves or weak heart nerves. Strengthen these inside or controlling nerves with Dr. Shoop's Restorative and see how quickly these ailments disappear. Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wis., will mail samples free. Write for them. A test will tell.

SIRES AND SONS.

William O'Brien, the Irish politician, has been prosecuted nine times and imprisoned for over two years.

Professor Arthur Fairbanks, who was appointed director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts on June 8 last, has entered upon his duties.

Lord Lucas, who recently established his claim to a seat in the house of lords, has only one leg. The other was shattered during the Boer war and had to be amputated.

The nine-year-old son of James Martin, editor of the Newark Star, has been appointed aid-de-camp with the rank of captain on the staff of Governor Stokes of New Jersey.

Alderman Michael Kenna, political boss of Chicago, is touring the thirty-two counties of Ireland in an automobile in order to make a complete diary, which will be of interest to his constituents.

Aladar Stolinski, an aristocratic lieutenant of a Hungarian hussar regiment, has resigned his commission to become an apprentice to a pork butcher in Budapest. He says he cannot live on his pay—$400 a year.

John A. Karl, who has just been elected for the seventh time chief of the Rockland (Me.) fire department, has seen thirty-five years of service in the department. He has been five times elected chief by unanimous vote.

Lord Strathcona, the Canadian high commissioner in London, is an advocate of the simple life, and he finds that he can dispose of his millions without the aid of extravagances. He is a devoted exponent of the two meals a day theory.

Lord Charles Beresford, always a temperate man, but now an advocate of total abstinence, was horrified at a recent dinner at which a lady, noticing he took no wine, exclaimed, "Ah, I suppose all of you hard drinkers have to come to it sooner or later."

Clarence S. Darrow, leading attorney for the defense in the Moyer-Haywood cases, is described as a picturesque personality. "Over six feet tall; shoulders of phenomenal breadth; a smooth face deeply furrowed with lines that he will never permit a photographer to eradicate because 'it cost too much to get them there;' long dark hair, with an unruly lock that drops effectively over his right eye; somewhat after the Webster, Clay or John Brown mold."

Germany produces more honey than any other European country, furnishing 20,000 tons annually.

Although Ireland is supposed to be a very poor country, it is a curious fact that in her city of Belfast is built a larger percentage of magnificent ocean liners than anywhere else in the world.

The daily return fare for thirty-one miles paid by a workman in Belgium is 7½ cents, and fares for shorter or longer distances are proportionately cheap. As a result 100,000 industrial workers live in the country, although employed in the towns.

One of the favorite postal cards offered for sale to tourists by shopkeepers of Rouen, Normandy, shows a modern feminine compatriot of Joan of Arc dressed and posed to represent the great French heroine spinning in her thatch roofed cottage at Domremy.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

The cornerstone of the Omaha cathedral will be laid the first Sunday in October.

Mississippi Baptists have $96,030 invested in orphanages and $220,000 in college property.

There are now 289 churches and 382 Sunday schools of the Christian denomination in Indiana, which during the year have gained 20,539 members.

When the Church Army wished to extend its headquarters in London, ten men promised $50,000 toward the work, and the Duchess of Argyll has laid the foundation stone for the buildings.

Bishop Partridge of Kioto, Japan, is a strong advocate of having parks, museums and the like, as well as churches, open on Sunday for the use of the "poor and those that need rest, especially a day of physical rest, a change of environment and a lifting of the mind for a higher sphere."

GOWN GOSSIP.

Taffetas with chine designs make very pretty dressing gowns.

Jumper negligees with the Japanese sleeve appear in the fall collection.

The full length sleeve is the prescribed style for the coming season.

Dyed nets and laces in all the modish tints will be fashioned into waists to be worn with fall costumes in the same shade.

The heavy rouleau strapping, so effectively used in Paris this season, looks very handsome, not only in black, but in white and pale colors and also in wadded silver tissue.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Cookbook.

To cover the pan in which fish is cooking will make the flesh soft.

Never mix a French dressing until ready to use. The vinegar and oil will separate.

Carrots are seldom overcooked, but rather undercooked. Thus always allow plenty of time for preparing carrots.

Tomatoes should always be cooked in an earthenware pipkin and stirred with a wooden spoon. Using a metal one will give your dishes "tinny" taste.

The Engineering Magazine

The Engineering Magazine for October is a special Mining and Machinery Number, of much increased size and of great interest and wealth of illustration. Dr. Douglas's article on the Copper Situation has the leading position—fittingly, on account of the timeliness of the contribution and the high authority of the author; but abreast of it in importance, and second only in position, is Mr. Alex Del Mar's study of the present industrial situation and prospect, in relation especially to the production of gold. He finds a sound basis for continued prosperity in the enormous output of all forms of natural wealth, but a disturbance of prices in the readjustment which this output makes inevitable, and a certain strain due to the limitation of circulation in the United States—a limitation imposed by the unnecessary hoarding of gold in the treasury, and concealed by the misleading statement issued of "Money in Circulation."

Other important features, all illustrated, are reviews of the tunnel works about New York, by H. T. Hildage; of the excavation for sky-scraper foundations, by T. Bernard Thompson; of mine pumping in the anthracite region, by H. V. Norris; of iron and steel making, by Prof. Bradley Stoughton; of the mechanical engineering of the mine, by C. C. Christensen; of electro-metallurgy, by J. B. C. Kershaw; of asbestos mining and manufacture, by E. Schaaf-Regelman, and of the economy of burning the very small sizes of anthracite in the boiler furnace, by W. D. Ennis. The number carries, as usual, the Review of the Engineering Press of the World, and the Engineering Index to all current technical literature.—The Engineering Magazine, New York.

GIVING BABY CASTOR OIL.

It's Very Easy if You Only Know How to Do It Properly.

Castor oil should never be given without first heating it a little. This does not mean getting it hot or putting a burning spoon into the little mouth. The object of heating is merely to thin a little the consistency of the heavy oil, and the most gentle warmth will do this. This change alone makes the liquid go down more easily.

When the dose is to be given it is well to call in a member of the family to act as assistant. Put baby down on the bed on his back and have ready a small napkin or other bit of linen wrung out in cold water. Fold this flat, just large enough to go under baby's chin up to the ears. Give this to the assistant and instruct her in her duty, which is merely that of holding the wet compress against the chin at the psychological moment. This second is when you gently hold the infant's nose, which you are to do just as you put the oil well back into his mouth, but not in the throat, which would then cause him to choke.

Holding the nose destroys the sense of taste, and the wet compress causes a flow of saliva that helps to send the medicine down. The thing necessary to success is that all shall be done together and that the oil shall fall on the precise spot on the tongue—that is to say, it should drop as close to the throat as it can without going into the throat. To put it too near the front of the mouth gets it all over baby's gums and gives him full benefit of the nasty flavor. If an infant fights at taking any kind of liquid medicine, it may be given in this way, but as a rule the little one swallows it unconsciously.

If medicine in a powdered form is to be given, the simplest and, for a young child, the best way is to give it dry. Open his mouth and have the dose ready on the point of a spoon. Drop this quickly well back on the tongue and then nurse or give him a bottle at once.

Pirates Secure £5,000.

There is quite an old-time flavor about a tale which comes from Odessa.

At 11 o'clock on a recent Sunday night the steamer Sophia was about sixteen miles from Odessa on a voyage to Korthion. The captain and passengers were having supper on deck when suddenly three young men appeared, and, covering the party with revolvers, held them in check while two others seized the man at the wheel and ordered him, under threat of death, to set the ship's course for Odessa.

Some of the pirates, who numbered 18, then went into the first-class saloon, where they took possession of an iron cash-box containing £5,000, which was in charge of a cashier of the Russian Bank for Foreign Trade. They also took £100 belonging to the passengers.

Then they disabled the engines, let off the steam, and finally made their escape in two of the Sophia's boats, after destroying the third.

To check a cold quickly, get from your druggist some little Candy Cold Tablets called Preventics. Druggists everywhere are now dispensing Preventics, for they are not only safe, but decidedly certain and prompt. Preventics contain no quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh nor sickening. Taken at the "sneeze stage" Preventics will prevent pneumonia, bronchitis, la grippe, etc. Hence the name Preventics. Good for feverish children. 48 Preventics 25 cents. Trial boxes 5 cents. Sold by all dealers.

Dublin Cathedral Damaged.

A huge half ton weight which supplied the motive power to the bells from the tower sixty feet high, crashed through the arches of Christ Church Cathedral recently after the church had been closed. The immense weight fell into the choir gallery. It has been decided to suspend services until the extent of the damage has been ascertained.

It was in Christ Church Cathedral which was erected in the eleventh century, that the litany was first read in Ireland in the English language. In 1553 mass was again celebrated in the church and continued for six years, under the order of Queen Mary. When the Episcopal service took its place.

Advice to New Housemakers.

Do not furnish your house fully until you have lived in it awhile.

Buy at first only such furniture as you need for comfort. When you are settled, you can study the needs of each part of the house, and after you have fully determined what you want buy it when you see an advantageous chance.

Never decide hastily upon a piece of furniture. Purchase furniture for the future as much as for the present. It is true fashion changes in furniture from year to year, but it is only people of large means who can follow a fashion of this kind.

Plain, elegant styles are the sort that wear best and give the best satisfaction in the end, even though they are a trifle more expensive at first.

Pearls in Fashion.

Some time ago fashion decreed that the finger that was adorned with a ruby should not have its beauty further enhanced by a ring of diamonds, that turquoise should not mingle with emeralds and so on. Now, however, there is a new law, and the hand that carried one pearl ring must wear no other rings than those of pearls, says the Cosey Corner. According to the rule that is worn, the hands show a blaze of diamonds or soft toned pearls, all quite unrelieved and showing as little as possible of their gold or silver setting.

A Tart Rejoinder.

The movement to erect a monument to Nicholas Flood Davin in British Columbia brings to mind his triumphant encounter with Senator McMullen ten years ago or so. McMullen was making a speech when Davin interrupted with an inquiry that was quite pertinent. McMullen rasped out with some asperity, "The honorable gentleman, as everybody knows, has rooms to let in his upper story." Up jumped Davin. "True," said he. "I have rooms to rent, but mine differ from the honorable gentleman's. Mine are furnished."—Argonaut.

Switzerland and Luxury.

Holiday makers will be interested, whether they are pleased or not, to learn that even Switzerland is being affected by the modern craving for luxury. Everywhere—on the heights as in the valleys—the simple inn is giving place to the grand hotel, in which the men dress for dinner and the ladies change their toilets several times a day. It is disconcerting to those who repair to the mountains in the hope of living the simple life there. —London Daily Graphic.

Amateur Scientists.

Very the routine of daily labor by cultivating a scientific hobby is the advice of Professor S. P. Thompson, who reminds us that much of the world's scientific work has been done by amateurs. For instance, William Herschel, the astronomer, was a music teacher; William Gilbert, author of De Magnete, was a medical man; Dr. W. H. Dallinger, authority on the microscope, was a clergyman, and William Sturgeon, inventor of the electromagnet, was a shoemaker.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 68 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crossed 60 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont.,
are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

WE HAVE A FEW MORE 5c SHARES TO SELL

They are TEN Cents Everywhere Else

Not all of the block of stock in the Guggenheim-Greenwater Copper Company, which was allotted to me some time ago to sell at 5 cents, is gone, but it is going. This stock now sells in the United States at 10 cents. While my allotment lasts I can sell at 5 cents, giving you a 100 per cent gain at the very outset.

The copper properties which the Guggenheim-Greenwater Company owns, at Ely, Nevada, and in the Willow Creek section of Greenwater promises great things. Shares in adjoining mines which once sold as comparatively low as this, now are so high that first-buyers made fortunes. You may do the same here.

If you want the best chance at a big killing, don't let this go by. See me about it today. I'll show you the proofs. Don't wait, or someone will get ahead of you.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

Remembering that the teacher of whom he had once been for a week a pupil, in the town of Framingham, had commenced operations by sharpening a lead pencil, so he now sharpened a similar one, determining as far as he could to follow that teacher's example. Maddy counted every fragment as it fell upon the floor, wishing so much that he would commence, and fancying that it would not be half so bad to have him approach her with some one of the terrible dental instruments lying before her, as it was to sit and wait as she was waiting. Had Guy Remington reflected a little, he would never have consented to do the doctor's work; but, unaccustomed to country usages, especially those pertaining to schools and teachers, he did not consider that it mattered which examined that young girl, himself or Dr. Holbrook. Viewing it somewhat in the light of a joke, he rather enjoyed it! and as the Framingham teacher had first asked her pupils their names and ages, so he, when the pencil was sharpened sufficiently, startled Madeline by asking her name.

"Madeline Amelia Clyde," was the meek reply, which Guy quickly recorded.

Now, Guy Remington intended no irreverence; indeed, he could not tell what he did intend, or what it was which prompted his next query:

"Who gave you this name?"

Perhaps he fancied himself a boy again in the Sunday school, and standing before the railing of the altar, where, with others of his age, he had been asked the question propounded to Madeline Clyde, who did not hear the doctor's smothered laugh as he retreated into the adjoining room.

In all her preconceived ideas of this examination, she had never dreamed of being catechised, and with a feeling of terror as she thought of that long answer to the question, "What is thy duty to thy neighbor?" and doubted her ability to repeat it, she said: "My sponsors, in baptism gave me the first name of Madeline Amelia, sir," adding as she caught and misconstrued the strange gleam in the dark eyes bent upon her, "I am afraid I have forgotten some of the catechism; I did not know it was necessary in order to teach school."

"Certainly, no; I do not think it is. I beg your pardon," were Guy Remington's ejaculatory replies, as he glanced from Madeline to the open door of the adjoining room, where was visible a slate, on which, in huge letters, the amused doctor had written "Blockhead."

There was something in Madeline's quiet, womanly, earnest manner which commanded Guy's respect, or he would have given vent to the laughter which was choking him, and thrown off his disguise. But he could not bear now to undeceive her, and, resolutely turning his back upon the doctor, he sat down by that pile of books and commenced the examination in earnest, asking first her age.

"Going on fifteen," sounded older to Madeline than "Fourteen and a half," so "Going on fifteen" was the reply, to which Guy responded: "That is very young, Miss Clyde."

"Yes, but Mr. Green did not mind. He's the committeeman. He knew how young I was," Madeline said, eagerly, her great brown eyes growing large with the look of fear which came so suddenly into them.

Guy noticed the eyes then, and thought them very bright and handsome for brown, but not so bright or handsome as a certain pair of soft blue orbs he knew, and feeling a thrill of satisfaction that sweet Lucy Atherstone was not obliged to sit there in that doctor's office to be questioned by him or any other man, he said: "Of course, if your employers are satisfied it is nothing to me, only I had associated teaching with women much older than yourself. What is logic, Miss Clyde?"

The abruptness with which he put the question startled Madeline to such a degree that she could not positively tell whether she had ever heard that word before, much less could she recall its meaning, and so she answered frankly, "I don't know."

A girl who did not know what logic was did not know much, in Guy's estimation, but it would not do to stop here, and so he asked her next how many cases there were in Latin?

Maddy felt the hot blood tingling to her very finger-tips, the examination had taken a course so widely different from her ideas of what it would probably be. She had never looked inside a Latin grammar, and again her truthful "I don't know, sir," fell on Guy's ear, but this time there was a half-despairing tone in the young voice usually so hopeful.

"Perhaps, then, you can conjugate the verb Amo," Guy said, his manner indicating the doubt he was beginning to feel as to her qualifications.

Maddy knew well what "conjugate" meant, but that verb Amo, what could it mean? and had she ever heard it before? Mr. Remington was waiting for her; she must say something, and with a gasp she began: "I amo, thou amoest, he amoes. Plural: We amo, ye or you amo, they amo."

Guy looked at her aghast for a single moment, and then a comical smile broke all over his face, telling poor Maddy plainer than could words that she had made a most ridiculous mistake.

"Oh, sir," she cried, her eyes wearing the look of the frightened hare, "it is not right. I don't know what it means. Tell me, teach me. What is it to amo?"

To most men it would not have seemed a very disagreeable task, teaching young Madeline Clyde "to amo," as she termed it, and some such idea flitted across Guy's mind, as he thought how pretty and bright was the eager face upturned to his, the pure white forehead, suffused with a faint flush, the cheeks a crimson hue, and the pale lips parted slightly as Maddy appealed to him for the definition of "amo."

"It is a Latin verb, and means 'to love,'" Guy said, with an emphasis on the last word, which would have made Maddy blush had she been less anxious and frightened.

Thus far she had answered nothing correctly, and, feeling puzzled to know how to proceed, Guy stepped into the adjoining room to consult with the doctor, but he was gone. So, returning, Guy resumed the examination by asking how "minus into minus could produce plus."

Again Maddy was at fault, and her low-spoken "I don't know" sounded like a wail of despair. Did she know anything, Guy wondered, and feeling some curiosity now to ascertain that fact, he plied her with questions philosophical, questions algebraical, and questions geometrical, until in an agony of distress Maddy raised her hands deprecatingly, as if she would ward off any similar questions, and sobbed out:

"Oh, sir, no more. It makes my head so dizzy. They don't teach that in common schools. Ask me something I do know."

Suddenly it occurred to Guy that he had gone entirely wrong, and mentally cursing himself for the blockhead the doctor had called him, he asked kindly:

"What do they teach? Perhaps you can enlighten me?"

"Geography, arithmetic, grammar, history, and spelling-book," Madeline replied, untying and throwing off her bonnet, in the vain hope that it might bring relief to her poor, giddy head, which throbbed so fearfully that all her ideas seemed for the time to have left her.

This was a natural consequence of the high excitement under which she was laboring, and so, when Guy did ask her concerning the books designated, she answered but little better than before, and Guy was wondering what he should do next, when the doctor's welcome step was heard, and leaving Madeline again, he repaired to the next room to report his ill-success.

"She does not seem to know anything. The veriest child ought to do better than she has done. Why, she has scarcely answered half a dozen questions correctly."

This was what poor Maddy heard, though it was spoken in a low whisper; but every word was distinctly understood and burned into her heart's core, drying her tears and hardening her into a block of marble. She knew that Guy had not done her justice, and this helped to increase the torpor stealing over her. Still she did not lose a syllable of what was saying in the back office, and her lips curled scornfully when she heard Guy remark: "I pity her; she is so young, and evidently takes it so hard. Maybe she's as good as they average. Suppose we give her the certificate."

TEA TABLE TRIMMINGS.

Little Dainties to Pique the Appetite at Afternoon Affairs.

Since the custom of taking afternoon tea is not only well established in this country, but now in danger of becoming an untimely feast, it is astonishing to note the numerous little dainties and extra trimmings which are being served to pique and delight the appetite. It is no longer merely a cup of tea and a slice of thin bread and butter that may be expected between 4 and 5:30 o'clock. Jam has been added to the list and often hot Scotch scones and English muffins. Beside the tea table proper there stands usually a sort of rack table, pyramidal in shape and having three shelves, one above the other and round like plates. Each one is covered with attractive china holding some fascinating biscuit or cake. Jam of one or two kinds is suggested in between them, and after the hostess has ascertained which jam and biscuit her guest prefers she spreads it for him herself before passing it on a small plate. This little attention appears very gracious.

Among the biscuits those of "health food" reputation are often found and the jam is spread over them to add to their somewhat questionable tastiness. Other hostesses have fine, small, flat wafers of whole wheat covered with chocolate in their own kitchens before serving. They are then above reproach to pass with tea. The biscuit itself is digestible, the chocolate tasty and nourishing. Biscuits covered with cheese, on the contrary, while highly agreeable to the taste, are avoided by those hypersensitive about their diet.

Strawberry jam is undoubtedly the favorite for spreading on English muffins. Blackberry jam or guava is chosen to spread on the health food biscuits, especially those made of graham or whole wheat. Scotch scones are spread only through the middle with fresh butter. These scones are very similar to old fashioned soda biscuits and are invariably served hot. In size they are little larger than a quarter of a dollar. The number that some people can make disappear is therefore readily countenanced.

Wafer toast finds a place at afternoon tea. In making it the bread is cut as thin as possible, and it is then toasted until extremely crisp. It is eaten dry or with jam, but it is never buttered.

When cake appears at afternoon tea, the fashion rages for a rich pound cake showing through it many large raisins. Europeans invariably refer to it as "American plum cake" and regard it as a specialty of this country. In entertaining foreigners, therefore, it is perhaps the most acceptable cake to offer.

of hard boiled eggs being placed on the vegetable. The sauce can be plain butter, seasoned with a little vinegar, pepper and salt, or a tartare one.

How One Girl Rests.

"The first thing I do when I get home from the office is to change all my clothing," said the business girl.

"I know it takes time, but it pays. It not only saves wear on the office skirt and shoes, which amounts to a great deal, for there is no quicker way to get a skirt shapeless and shabby than to lounge around in it at home, but I do it even more for the rest it gives me.

"If you have never made a practice of it, you cannot guess what a rest it is to put on other shoes, to slip into another blouse and collar and skirt.

"When I have bathed my face and done this, I feel like another person. Even if I don't get a chance to lie down before dinner I am refreshed.

"And my office dress and shoes, all carefully brushed and ready for morning, are also the better for this extra relief."

—Mr. Geo. Yeotas will soon install a hat cleaning machine in his shoe parlor.

Constipation

Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring prompt relief for Constipation. With others, coarse all-wheat bread will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man, if physicians can but find Nature's way to health. And this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Peppery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., the same Cascara bark is given its greatest possible power to correct constipation. A toothsome Candy Tablet, called Lax-ets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenuous and most effective prescription. Its effect is to correct constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Sallow Complexion, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

No griping, no unpleasant after effects are experienced, and Lax-ets are put up in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents per box.

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-third miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about nine and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross strikes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this promising Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

John D. Roddick, Lyndhurst Tells His Experience

After Two Years' Suffering with Lame Back and Weak Kidneys, Was Cured by Dr. Hamilton.

Lyndhurst, Ont., Oct. 2—The following statement made by Mr. Roddick, lumber merchant, tells of the remarkable knowledge possessed by Dr. Hamilton:

"Two years ago I had grippe which settled in my back and kidneys. I was sickly and very miserable, suffered great pain and inconvenience. Different remedies were tried without benefit and then I decided to try Dr. Hamilton's Mandrake and Butternut Pills. I derived immense good from their use in short time. When two boxes were used I was immeasurably better. To-day I am well. Neighbors suffering from kidney and back trouble have also been cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which I am convinced is the best medicine for regulating and cleansing the system. They are very mild but do the work just the same."

Nothing so certain in diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels and kidneys as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c at all dealers.

Sailors and Rheumatism.

Rheumatism is exceptionally common among sailors, owing to the cold and wet to which they are exposed.

Fan Painting.

Mme. de Pompadour encouraged fan painting and also collected fine specimens of the work. Greuze, Watteau and other great artists did not disdain to lend their talents to the art. These pictures were done mostly on vellum or chicken skin.

Tattooed Tongues.

In the Sandwich islands widows have their departed husbands' names tattooed on their tongues.

The McKinley Medal.

The three and one-half inch medallion badge of McKinley which delegates to the St. Louis convention of 1896 wore so conspicuously had this name beneath the portrait of the nominee: MacKinley. The error was never discovered until after the election.

The Vulgate.

The Vulgate is the authorized Latin version of the Bible, made by Jerome between 383 and 405 A. D.

Fruits and Vegetables.

Not until Henry VIII.'s time were either raspberries or strawberries or cherries grown in England, and we do not read of the turnip, cauliflower and quince being cultivated before the sixteenth century or the carrot before the seventeenth century.

Antimonopoly.

The antimonopolistic sentiment in this country is not a modern idea. In 1777 Massachusetts passed an act entitled "To prevent monopoly and oppression."

Captain Kidd.

Captain Kidd was not hanged for piracy, although everybody knew he was a pirate, but for striking a mutinous seaman over the head with a bucket and accidentally killing him, thus making it possible to bring the charge of manslaughter.

Soap of the Hindoos.

The only soap which the Hindoos of the orthodox type employ is made entirely of vegetable products. But soap is little used in India, being almost an unknown luxury with the natives.

Gypsy Musicians.

Though there are many gypsies in England, the United States and other nations, it is in Roumania, Hungary and Russia that they are chiefly found, their numbers in that part of Europe being placed at 500,000. Many of them are capable musicians. The gypsy players of Hungary are famous. In that country gypsies are called "Tsiganes." The French call them "Bohemians," from which fact comes the use of that word to describe the easy free life of idlers.

Hamlet.

"Hamlet" has made more money than any other play in the world.

The Sheffield Club.

The Sheffield club is the oldest football organization in the United Kingdom. It was started in 1855, and its minute book for 1857 is still in existence.

German Silver.

German silver is a brass containing from fifteen to twenty-five parts of nickel in each hundred.

Spiders.

The spiders that spin webs are in an infinite minority compared with those which do not. Ground spiders, as the spin spanners are called, abound everywhere and depend on agility and swiftness of foot to catch their prey.

Vanilla.

Vanilla comes from a genus of climbing orchid which grows plentifully in the tropics.

Etiquette in China.

In this country etiquette is largely a matter of custom and tradition; in China the manners of every class are dictated by a special academy under the emperor.

Thirst.

Rinsing the mouth with very hot water stops the thirst. This is safer than drinking when the body is overheated.

Great Britain's Territory.

Cabbage.

Cabbage is the most nourishing vegetable of all.

The Calmucks.

The Calmucks of the great Tartar family are, although civilized, extremely ugly. They have short, fat noses, small eyes, high cheek bones and a protruding chin.

Actors in Russia.

The manager of a theatrical touring company in Russia has to deposit with the government enough money to bring all his people home again. Actors are never stranded there.

Seaweed.

The longest plants in the world are seaweed. One tropical and subtropical variety is known which, when it reaches its full development, is at least 600 feet in length. Seaweeds do not receive any nourishment from the sediment at the bottom or borders of the sea, but only from air and mineral matters held in solution in the sea water.

Forty years of experience has proven its superior worth as a blood purifier and invigorating tonic for the cure of stomach disorders and all liver ills. It builds up the run-down system as no other tonic can in which alcohol is used. The active medicinal principles of native roots such as Golden Seal and Queen's root, Stone and Mandrake root, Bloodroot and Black Cherrybark are extracted and preserved by the use of chemically pure, triple-refined glycerine. Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce at Buffalo, N. Y., for free booklet which quotes extracts from well-recognized medical authorities such as Drs. Bartholow, King, Scudder, Coe, Ellingwood and a host of others, showing that these roots can be depended upon for their curative action in all weak states of the stomach, accompanied by indigestion or dyspepsia as well as in all bilious or liver complaints and in all "wasting diseases" where there is loss of flesh and gradual running down of the strength and system.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, pure blood and so invigorates and regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, and, through them, the whole system. Thus all skin affections, blotches, pimples and eruptions as well as scrofulous swellings and old open running sores or ulcers are cured and healed. In treating old running sores, or ulcers, it is well to insure their healing to apply to them Dr. Pierce's All-Healing Salve. If your druggist don't happen to have this Salve in stock, send fifty-four cents in postage stamps to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and a large box of the "All-Healing Salve" will reach you by return post.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

Japan Wants Canada to Pay Damages Promptly

Consul-General Nosse Shows Some Impatience and Dominion Government will Probably Pay Bill and Ask Vancouver to "Make Good."

Ottawa, Oct. 2.—Hon. T. Nosse, Japanese consul-general in Ottawa has drawn the attention of the State Department to the delay which has occurred in the settlement of the damages sustained by his fellow countrymen through the riots which occurred in Vancouver three weeks ago, and he is asking that steps be taken to make good the losses sustained.

Mr Nosse's letter contains no detailed statement of what these losses amount to but four or five thousand dollars at most will probably cover the whole.

So that those who suffered may not be kept longer waiting for their money, the Dominion government will probably appoint one of the local judges to fix the damages and then settle the bill, looking afterwards to the local authorities for a settlement of the amount so expended. The Japanese who suffered in the riots will no doubt have a chance to appear before whoever is appointed for the purpose to produce evidence on the damage their premises sustained.

Counsel will be appointed to see that the Crown is not imposed on in the matter.

DR. MUNRO CALLED DOWN.

It now turns out, according to a message to Sir Wilfrid Laurier from Dr. Munro yesterday, that the action of the latter in shutting the door against Japanese who are not provided with passports to Canada was taken without proper authority. A message was sent to the doctor on Sunday, enquiring on whose authority his action was taken, and adding that any such course as he contemplated would be a distinct violation of our treaty with Japan. Subsequently tion. Mr. Nosse, the Japanese consul, called on the secretary of state, protesting against the action that Dr. Munro had taken, and pointing out that there was nothing in the treaty to require the production by an incoming Japanese immigrant of any passport whatever.

Dr. Munro's reply arrived this morning, and states that he had acted in the matter on his own authority and in requiring the production of passports to Canada from the incoming Japanese was merely carrying out the old arrangement.

The message of Sunday from Sir Wilfrid will already have advised the doctor of the mistake into which he has fallen, but no doubt a further message will be sent him after the council meeting of this afternoon. Consul Nosse waited on the government yesterday morning, and was informed of the matter as it now stands.

Baseball Umpire Flies for Safety

Beaverton Express: Talk about the bribery and rowdyism rampant in the senior and intermediate C. L. A., but when it comes down to the threatening of a weak-voiced humble umpire in an amateur contest for fame of baseball, we have just about reached the limit. Such however, was the case Saturday when Beaverton and Eden boys met to do battle on Lakeview grounds, and the captain and pitcher of the Beaverton nine openly threatened the umpire three sizes smaller than himself, with dire punishment if he did not cheat. The umpire, however, was of the sandy kind, and positively refused to be a party to any such game, and to escape the wrath of the fiery pitcher made a record trip down town on the handlebars of a friend's bicycle. Such conduct is, to say the least, deplorable, and the offender should be harshly dealt with by the officers of the league, and his certificate cancelled. If such conduct as this is allowed the game will soon deteriorate and few will care for the job of umpiring, with the possibility of being roughly handled thrown in as an extra inducement. The game ended in a victory for Eden by a score of 11—7 which about shows the relative merits of the teams.

Horticultural Society Buys Bulbs

The Horticultural Society has decided to place an import order for a large number of the choicest bulbs, including tulips, hyacinths, etc. These are for distribution among the members of the Society and will be given out on arrival. The society has done splendid work during the past season. Thousands of our citizens have enjoyed many hours of pleasure viewing the beautifully floral decorated banks and the grass and expanse of Victoria Park.

Adventure with a Bear

Messrs Guy Quartermaine, son of Mr. Thos Q. Quartermaine, the well known local accountant, and Fred Reid have returned from a most enjoyable outing in the wilds of Cavendish and Anstruther townships. Whilst out after the delusive partridge in this far northern district, they had quite an adventure, which for lads of their age was somewhat ominous. Whilst hunting they unexpectedly came face to face with a large black bear. As their ammunition was not of a calibre for such game, they were perplexed what to do, but followed Bruin who promptly treated Several shots were fired but the bear got away.

The young men report having been treated like the sons of Irish kings by those in charge of the Cavendish Lumber Company's gangs as well as by the employes.

Many Wait Too Long

A well-known authority states that Backache and pains in the loins are only too often the danger signals which notify the patient that something is wrong with the kidneys, and warns everyone to be careful, particularly at this period of the year, when the skin pores are closed, forcing the kidneys to do double their work of filtering the impurities and poisons from the blood and system.

At the first sign of backache or pain in the region of the Kidneys, or weakness and urinary trouble, the following simple home recipe should be used. Any one can easily prepare it:

Fluid extract Dandelion, one-half oz.; Compound Kargun, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Any good prescription pharmacy will supply these three ingredients at small cost, which can easily be mixed by shaking well in a bottle. Few people seem to know the value of these common remedies in the treatment of the kidneys. This simple prescription, when taken as directed, will regulate the urine, clear up and remove sediment, overcome back pains and cleanse the entire kidney structure, correcting bladder troubles in just a little while.

Did Ernest Green Skip for 15 Cents?

It was rumored yesterday that Ernest Greene who has been employed all summer at the Peterborough Creamery, left the city Saturday evening under a cloud, and also taking seven dollars, the amount of an account which he had collected. It appears Greene was sent to a local hotel with an account to collect, where he received $7.15. His week's wages had not been paid him so that he only took 15 cents more than his pay, which amounts to $7. It is thought that he went to Lindsay, where he formerly resided. However, there may be an explanation forthcoming, as hardly any sane man ever made himself a defaulter for 15 cents. We hope he will show later on the reason for his flitting.

Another Invention of Dr. Gray's

Local Physician Gets Out a Device for Receiving Mail

In a former issue of The Times we noted that Dr. Gray, the local coroner, had placed in his Sherbrooke street residence, a number of quasi patents of his own, ranging from a handy mode of delivery of coal which the doctor uses for heating purposes to a patent of his own for burning the same coal in his cellar furnace.

Now that the new system of house to house postal delivery has been inaugurated, the doctor has arranged for a means for his own postal delivery. His home mail delivery consists of a wooden box about five feet in height, which is placed against the right hand jamb of the front door and fits into the space between the outer and inner door. The back of the box is formed by the closed inner door and when the door is opened whatever mail matter may be in the box is then obtainable. In the outer side of the box is a slot for the deposit of mail matter protected by a wooden valve hinged at the top by means of a screw. The sides of the box extend a short distance above its real top and in the space thus formed may be placed packages, too bulky to be passed through the slot.

Police Court

At yesterdays' Police Court, Philip O'Brien, a feeble, old man who hails from the East Ward House of Providence, pleaded guilty to having been drunk in a public place on Monday. The Magistrate after Philip said he had not drank much, but that he had been and was so overcome by very little liquor, remarked, "The usual fine, $2." Chief Hoezel handed O'Brien an envelope containing some $24 that had been taken from after his arrest. The $2 was paid out of this and Mr. O'Brien was lucky when under this influence, to get a night's lodging and still retain his bank roll for the price of his fine.

Chamberlain Helpless Son Finally Confesses

London, Oct. 2.—After many denials on the part of the family that Joseph Chamberlain was more than temporarily incapacitated, his son Austin at last has publicly admitted the serious character of his father's malady, although endeavoring to put the best possible face upon the matter. To-day he said; "My father continues to improve, although his progress is not all we could wish for. He cannot yet walk without assistance."

This is the first time any member of the statesman's family has admitted that Mr. Chamberlain's illness is more than a passing indisposition or that his return to public office would be delayed more than a few weeks.

SAT UP IN THE COFFIN

This Young Woman was Nearly Buried in a Swoon --Mourners Climbed out of Windows

Chicago, Oct. 2. — A despatch from Wheeling, W. Va., says; Relatives of Mrs. Frederick Hartzell, the young wife of a farmer living near Huntington, were bemoaning her death yesterday, a few minutes before the minister arrived to conduct the funeral rites, when she suddenly sat up and climbed out of the coffin.

There was a rush of mourners for the open air, windows being used as exits. The minister swooned when a pale faced woman over whose body he had been called to conduct services met him at the door.

The family was too poor to have a physician, and the woman fell into a swoon in which state she remained for four days. Her husband believed her to be dead, and sent for the undertaker. He prepared for the interment without discovering that life lingered in the body.

Keir Hardie is the Hero of India Guest of Agitators

London, Oct. 2.—Kier Hardie is making a triumphant tour of Eastern Bengal, under the auspices of the native agitators. He is feted and garlanded with flowers everywhere. He declares there is no reason why India shouldn't be self-governing like Canada.

Kier Hardie is the British member of parliament who was in Toronto a few months ago. He is the leader of the Socialist wing of the Labor party.

Food Stopped It

Good Food Worth More Than a Gold Mine

To find a food that will put an absolute stop to "running down" is better than finding a gold mine.

Many people when they begin to run down go from one thing to another without finding a food that will stop the progress of disease. Grape-Nuts is the most nourishing food known and will set one right if that is possible.

The experience of a Louisiana lady may be interesting. "I received a severe nervous shock some years ago and from that and overwork gradually broke down. My food did not agree with me and I lost flesh rapidly. I changed from one kind of food to another but was unable to stop the loss of flesh and strength.

"I do not exaggerate when I say that I finally became, in reality, a living skeleton. My nights were sleepless, and I was compelled to take opiates in various forms. After trying all sorts of food without success I finally got down to toasted bread with a little butter, and after a while this began to sour and I could not digest it. Then I took to toasted crackers and lived on them for several weeks, but kept getting weaker.

"One day Grape-Nuts was suggested and it seemed to me from the description that it was just the sort of food I could digest. I began by eating a small portion, gradually increasing the amount each day.

"My improvement began at once for it afforded me the nourishment that I had been starving for. No more harassing pains and indigestion, for a month I ate nothing but Grape-Nuts and a little cream, then I got so well I could take on other kinds of food. I gained flesh rapidly and now I am in better health than I have been in years. I still stick to Grape-Nuts because I like the food and I know of its powerful nourishing properties. My physician says that my whole trouble was a lack of power to digest food, and that nothing but food that he knows of would have brought me out of the trouble except Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

Belleville Burglar Gets Heavy Sentence

Belleville, Oct. 1.—In the county court yesterday morning three young Montreal Frenchmen, Arthur Villeneuve, Lucien Leclaire, and Arthur Dellaire, came up for sentence for burglary before Senior Judge Deroche. Villeneuve and Dellaire had turned King's evidence, and implicated Leclaire, alias Joseph Plouffe.

Dellaire was the first one sentenced, and cried bitterly. Judge Deroche took a lenient view of his case, saying Leclaire induced him to leave Montreal on the burglarizing expedition. He then sentenced him to three months in the common jail.

Arthur Villeneuve, alias Lachappelle, was the next prisoner. He pleaded hard for another chance, saying he would be a good man. He felt his position keenly. The judge remind the prisoner of the finding of a revolver, flashlight, and stolen jewelry on this person when arrested. Then he sentenced the accused to two years in the Gardner case, and one year for receiving stolen goods, both to run concurrently.

Lucien Leclaire, alias Joseph Plouffe was next to receive sentence. The accused, before being sentenced, stated he came from a good family, that a relative conducted the mayoralty in Montreal last year. Judge Deroche spoke strongly against the prisoner, as he was the ringleader, and sentenced him to five years in Kingston penitentiary. The prisoner took the sentence coolly.

Spain's Queen Can Sleep Now

Paris, Oct. 2;—The recent operation on King Alfonso for adenoids was made necessary, according to a writer in Gil Blas, more for domestic reasons than bad health. The king had developed the habit of snoring so loudly and persistently that he entirely deprived the Queen of sleep. Drugs and cold baths before retiring proved unavailing. Finally the king's nose was examined and it was found the nasal passages partially were obstructed by adenoid growths. When these were removed by an operation the king's unpleasantly loud respiration ceased, and the queen now sleeps undisturbed.

Fire Brigade is Remembered

Mr. Alf. Parker Sends Check in Recognition of Services Rendered

Mr. Thomas Rutherford, chief of the local fire department has received a letter from Mr. Parker, accompanied by a cheque for $20, as follows.

"Please accept the enclosed cheque and also my sincere thanks for prompt and efficient service rendered by your brigade at the recent fire in my dye works and laundry."

The members of the brigade desire to returns thanks to Mr. Parker for his generous and totally unexpected gift.

Whilst it is only seemly that people should respond generously to the efforts of the brigade to save their property, the members of the local fire brigade have ever done their duty irrespective of any thought of reward or assistance. Still such action as shown by Mr. Parker shows clearly that the good work done by the brigade is appreciated by those who gain thereby.

Local Cases in Osgoode Hall

Osgoode Hall (Toronto), notes contain the following of local interest;

Port Hope Brewing and Malting Co. vs. Cavanagh.—H. A. Ward (Port Hope) and C. A. Moss, for plaintiffs, appealed from judgment of McMahon, J., 6 O.W.R. 985 dismissing with costs an action by the company and John Crane to recover the price of five shares of the capital stock of plaintiff company subscribed for by defendant. McMahon, J., held that the company had no stock to sell on the date of the contract with defendant, January 4th, 1904. W. E. Middleton, for defendant, opposed appeal. Reserved.

Quinn vs. Fairbairn.—G. H. Watson, K.C., for defendant, appealed from judgment of county court of Peterborough, dated April 24th, 1907, finding for the plaintiffs, with costs, on an interpleader issue. The issue was over certain goods and chattels in execution by the sheriff of the county of Peterborough. Mr. S. T. Medd (Peterborough), for plaintiffs, opposed appeal. Not finished.

Orangemen Wait on Mr. Borden

Vancouver, Oct. 1.—Replying to a deputation of Orangemen which waited on him at the Hotel Vancouver on Tuesday, Mr. R. L. Borden stated that the school question in Alberta and Saskatchewan could not be made an issue in the next Dominion election. He added that if the people of the new provinces wanted any amendments made in the constitutions conferred on them by the Dominion parliament they would have to apply directly to the Imperial parliament.

With the land question matters were different. The Dominion house if it saw fit, could hand over the administration of the public lands to the new provinces.

"I have nothing to say at present. We shall report first," said Mr. William Hunt to the province at the conclusion of the interview with the Conservative leader.

It transpired that this was the third delegation of members of the Orange Order, which has waited on Mr. Borden since his arrival in Vancouver. The deputation was an imposing one, comprising over thirty prominent citizens. The list included Ald. McSpadden, Prof. Odlum, William Hunt, Rev. Merrion Smith, Dr. Evans, Ald. Jeffs, Thomas Duke, C. W. Sawers, E. J. Clark, Frank Webb, and Messrs Schofield, Taylor and York.

"One school, one language, one flag" was the crux of the arguments made by the various speakers in addressing the Conservative leader.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 1.—Every Hindu in Vancouver whose finances will permit of the trip, intends to leave for California before the rainy season sets in. Hundreds of the late arrivals from the Orient are working and saving every cent they make in order to pay their passage south.

The fame of California as a winter health resort is spreading rapidly among the Hindus, who fear that winter rain in Vancouver means death to them. Thirty Hindus left for San Francisco on the last Pacific coast steamer to sail, and between thirty and fifty will leave on the steamer City of Puebla, which is the next boat for the south. All these Hindus pay the $1 head tax, which the United States immigration authorities assess foreigners.

One Apple Tree, 73 Varieties

Palo Alto, Cal., Oct. 2.—Luther Burbank has presented the university with a box of apples containing specimens of three different varieties, all grown on the same tree. This remarkable production of one tree is the result of several years experimenting by Burbank. The tree was grafted upon from the time it was a mere sapling. The apples were exhibited by Dr. Jordan before his class in biology, and there were apples of all sizes and colors displayed. Some of the apples are fine as eggs, while others are small and not palatable.

In this connection it might be noted that the last mentioned account of $1808.62 will come back to the board in fees, at least so our representative was told by a member of the board.

Miss Dorothy Hall asked that her leave of absence on account of ill-health be extended to Nov. 1st.

A resignation was tendered by Mr. Courtes Fessenden, principal of the Collegiate Institute, sent in a letter saying that after 17 years' duty as principal, he wanted to be relieved of the onus of such position at the end of the present year as he finds the nervous strain too strong. He would seemingly be willing to give his services as a teacher, but wants to quit the principalship.

Dr. Morrison brought up the matter of plans of the new Collegiate Institute building, as Architect Hiebert was present. He referred to the head master's room. He thought by leaving out the head master's room it would increase the class room. His suggestion on motion was adopted.

By right of possession this lot belongs to the Methodist church but the present owner in fact will sell for $3.75.

China Takes Great Step

London, Oct. 2.—A special despatch from Pekin says the Dowager Empress has issued a decree declaring the government of China to be a constitutional monarchy.

Recent despatches from China indicated a remarkable spread of the movement in favor of a constitutional government, which was being advocated by nearly all the leading authorities in the different provinces. Already the empress dowager had sent commissioners to study the form of government in Britain, Japan, and Germany, but it now appears that the alarming signs of disaffection throughout the empire, due to high taxes, famine, and other causes, have impelled Pekin to a further step. The Radicals in China are not easily satisfied, and it is more than possible that serious insurrections will occur before constitutional government can be firmly established. The decree, however, is significant of China's intentions to take a place among the progressive nations of the world.

Shanghai, Oct. 1.—Details received here today in regard to the outbreak of Boxerism at Kanchowfu, 500 hundred miles south of Kiukiang province of Kiang-Si, last week, say that the buildings of the Catholic Mission and the China Inland Mission there were destroyed as the results of riots organized against "the worshippers of the Great White God."

A French priest was killed, but the other missionaries and their families are safe. The Chinese officials have sent detachments of soldiers to Kanchowfu to restore order and have taken steps to protect the missionaries. The authorities announce that the cholera epidemic which broke out here towards the end of August has now been stamped out.

The China Inland Mission people stationed at Kan Chow Fu are Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Horne. Mrs. Horne is a Hamilton woman, and Mr. Horne comes from Lindville. They went out in 1898 and were invalided home very shortly on furlough. From the reports sent to the mission's offices in Toronto, on Church street, it appears that while the mission buildings are totally destroyed, the missionaries all reached a place of safety. No other details of the affair have yet been received.

Eng. Olympiad Program

Toronto, Oct. 2.—The complete program of the International Olympiad, to be held in London, Eng., next year has arrived. There are 25 athletic events, 3 archery, 7 cycling, 6 fencing, a flying machine contest, 2 gymnastic, 1 hockey, 4 lacrosse, 2 motor-boat, 3 motor-car, 1 riding, 1 racquet, 4 rowing, 5 shooting, 7 skating, 9 swimming, 2 tennis, 5 wrestling, and 3 yachting.

The Stadium will be capable of holding about 70,000 spectators and will contain dressing-rooms, lavatories, and other accommodation for competitors in the games.

The center will be an arena of turf of oval shape, having a long axis of 700 feet and a short axis of 300 feet. Round this arena will be built two tracks, the inner for running and the outer for cycling. Running alongside the arena will be a huge swimming bath, with a deep space in the middle for high diving and water polo.

Miners In Court Jeered and Cheered

Cobalt, Oct. 2.—The trial of McGuire, president of the Miners' Union, charged with assaulting an officer and resisting arrest at a public meeting last week at Haileybury, and also of Roadhouse, charged with using insulting language, and of Frank Lightfoot, charged with assault all on the same occasion, was held yesterday at Haileybury before Magistrates Harris and Colonel McGuire was committed for trial at North Bay during December. Roadhouse and Lightfoot will come up again.

Practically all the evidence by the defence was overruled as irrelevant Mr. Slaight, for the defence, contended that, instead of holding a court of justice, the court presiding were turned into a court of inquiry. The court room was crowded, and intense interest prevailed throughout. The magistrates protested against the lack of respect shown towards the court, the miners present jeering or cheering as their feelings prompted them, but the complaint was practically unavailing.

CURED PAINFUL IRREGULARITIES

Strong Testimony From a Lady Resident of Clarksburg, Proving That Ferrozone Surpasses All Other Remedies

The health of many women is constantly imperilled through failure of certain organs to work according to nature's requirements.

Where this condition occurs there is no safer remedy to employ than Ferrozone, which has a specific action in female troubles.

Not only does it act directly on the organs, ensuring regularity and freedom from pain, but by forming rich red blood fortifies the system against weakening drains.

FERROZONE MAKES STRONG WOMEN

Ferrozone possesses a volume of merit totally absent in the ordinary medicine, and its superiority is proclaimed by thousands of women it has restored to vigorous health. From Mrs. F. O. Caldwell comes the following endorsement, written from her home in Clarksburg: "I went through a most trying experience with what is commonly known as 'Female Trouble.' It isn't necessary to state my symptoms, but I suffered a great deal. My health was well nigh ruined, and I got into such a condition that I couldn't even sleep. I was dreadfully nervous, weak and pale. Different prescriptions were recommended and I tried them. But Ferrozone was the first to help. I improved steadily under Ferrozone, and normal conditions were finally established. I gained weight, my color and spirits improved, and my former health was restored. Ferrozone cured me, and with a full heart I recommend this good medicine to all other women."

Beware of imitations—don't allow a druggist to palm off anything else for Ferrozone, which costs 50c. per box or six boxes for $2.50 at all dealers.

THE JAPANESE TREATY

The clamor for the abrogation of the treaty with Japan is unwarranted. If it were complied with we do not see that it would alter the case respecting Japanese immigration one jots. Of course, in such an event it might be claimed that anti-Japanese legislation would not be in violation of the treaty rights of the Japanese, but if any man runs away with the idea that the reason why the people of Japan claim to have similar rights in Canada to what other people have, is the fact that the Dominion parliament ratified the treaty, he is under a very great misapprehension. The Japanese people have just as good a right to go for lawful purposes to any part of the world, as Englishmen, Frenchmen or anyone else. We may just as well let that idea soak down into our minds, for what we have to deal with in respect to Oriental immigration, so far as Japan is concerned, is gained by treaty but what it has won in war, namely a national prestige, which is possibly reckoned at just a little more than it is worth.

Let us be sensible in the discussion of this question. Practically we are all of one mind in Canada. It is an imperial question; it is a Canadian question; it is a British Columbia question, but the settlement of it must be through the Imperial Government with the co-operation of the Dominion government, and we will simply be standing in our own light if we take an attitude which has a tendency to make a satisfactory adjustment of it more difficult than it would be under normal conditions. The solution will come by an agreement and we have not the least doubt that Japan will bring to bear in negotiations for an agreement that exceedingly good sense, which has marked her statesmen under much more difficult circumstances. It is an easy thing for a number of people to get together and pass resolutions. We take no exception to such a course. The more plainly it is demonstrated to Japan that the sober sense of the people of Canada demands that immigration from that country to ours shall be greatly restricted, the more quickly will Japan see the need of meeting our views. The question has been dicussed on one hand as if Japan were a negligible quantity and that we have only to say what we want to get it. On the other hand it has been approached as through the island Empire were a political stinging nettle, which had to be handled with gloves, and even then was not safe to touch. Both these ideas are absurd. The Anglo-Japanese alliance is just as important to them as it is to us. Japan's trade with us is as important to them as our trade with them is to us. Japanese racial characteristics have no more right to be controlling factors in the intercourse of the two nations than ours have. An alliance which is lacking in reciprocal obligation is not worth containing. The people of Canada have expressed themselves in an unmistakable foolish way. Now let the matter rest for a time. To keep fussing away at the feelings of the Japanese people will not help matters in the least.

GOD SAVE THE KING

In Winnipeg at the meeting of the Labor Congress a few days ago Socialists disgraced themselves and the province from which they came by refusing to rise when the toast of the King was proposed. Recently Socialists in the British Columbia Legislature refused to rise when the local representative of His Majesty entered the Assembly Room. During the labour riots, the mob in Vancouver declared its intention of burning in effigy the representative of His Majesty, and a supine civic administration permitted it to do so. Little wonder that having done this, the mob proceeded to violate the laws of the land and to bring the discredit upon British institutions.

The time has come for plain speaking. The time has come when the blatherskite element, which has attached itself like a leech to organizations of honest, loyal and patriotic workingmen, should be held up for public execration. What is the King? He is the personification of the Majesty of the Nation. Of what does this Majesty consist? In the first place it consists of that principle of liberty of speech, which makes it possible for Socialist blatherskites to emit their tirades without being put under arrest. In the next place it means the safety of life, liberty and property. In the next place it stands for a fair field and no favor, for it is true and every Socialist knows it, that under the protection of this Majesty, any person under the British flag may attain any position, which his talents fit him to fill, except that of king, which experience has taught the British people cannot well be made a place open to the ambition of everyone. It means absolute liberty of thought, speech and action within such limits as the majority of the community think best to prescribe. This is the Majesty of the Nation—not the extent of its area, the wealth of its resources, or the glory of its history, except so far as that history teaches that under the flag "liberty broadens down from precedent."

When we drink to the health of the King, we are not simply honoring the man, Edward, although he is a man in every sense of the word—a patriot in the truest meaning, a friend and promoter of peace, an example of good and progressive citizenship, and the most popular man in the Empire. As such we might all be proud to honor him. But it is not the individual that we recognize when we rise to drink his health, but the representative of the Majesty of the Nation, the personification of the British "crowned democracy."

Canada ought to have no place within her borders for those who decline to recognize these things, but on the contrary take occasion to show contempt for them. Yet the very thing which these Socialists profess to despise, enables them to remain in the country, and if an attempt were made to remove them they would be the first to appeal to the Majesty which they insult. "God Save the King" is more than a form of words. It is the embodiment in a short phrase of the result of long centuries of evolution in the science of human government. The spirit which animates it, alone makes it possible for men living under the British flag and enjoying its protection to give vent to half formed notions, which are paraded as Socialism.

The Bohemian for October

A score or more of the brightest of American humorists tell in the October Bohemian the secrets of their craft in an article entitled, "How a Joke is Made." The article sparkles with witty stories and humorous illustrations. Another article, entitled, "Being a Model" will dispel many mistaken notions which the ordinary American has held regarding the artist's model. Miss Blanche Ives, whose work on the American stage is attracting much attention, contributes to the October issue an account of her life, entitled, "My Yesterdays."

The leading humorous feature of the number is "The Autobiography of Cupid," edited by Edward Marshall. In this feature the little god makes a clean breast of his long and busy life. "Here and There," as usual, overflows with attractive engravings and stories of persons in the public eye.

The short stories have the usual bright quality. They are: "Back to Nature," a funny experiment in sociology wherein a disgruntled mortal refuses to have anything to do longer with civilization; "Doctor Pro Tem," a breezy, fresh story of the woods; "The Patent Adjustable," a burglar story, wherein the midnight prowler shows most unexpected resources of wit in a trying emergency; "The Heart of the Fox," a story of a Japanese secret-service woman; "The Stowaway," a story of the sea and of a strange retribution; and a group of crisp "Ten-minute Stories." These attractive contents are reinforced by some very pretty verse and by a welcome amount of humor and satire.

MAY FACE COAL FAMINE.

Car Shortage This Fall Will Lead to Grave Situation.

Western Canada is face to face with a serious fuel problem again, and another famine such as made the winter of 1907 famous is not beyond probability. The deep snow of the past winter greatly hampered work in the bush, and but comparatively little wood was cut. Consequently this great source of supply will be eliminated. Wood will be very scarce and very dear. The only hope of householders lies in the fact that the coal supply may be abundant. At present, according to an official statement, there are only 41,950 cords of wood in sight for Winnipeg's consumption. Even much of that amount may not come this way. Inasmuch as the city requires 1,000 cords per day during the winter season, or upwards of 200,000 per annum, the seriousness of the situation is manifest. The country dealers are making a grave mistake by failing to lay in supplies of coal, and pursuing the policy of previous years by drawing from headquarters according to the demands of the trade.

The Situation Outlined.

The coal supply question is not understood without investigation. It has some features that are not within the knowledge of everyone. Western Canada, although dotted with mines, is not yet self-sustaining in the matter of fuel. Pittsburg still holds sway in the eastern half of Manitoba, including, of course, Winnipeg. There is plenty of coal in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Crow's Nest Pass, but not all of it is storable. Bituminous, semi-bituminous and anthracite products in and about the foothills of the Rockies are, of course, capable of being put into stock for steam and domestic consumption when required; but the lignite coal of the plains, including the output of the Edmonton, Strathcona, Morinville, Medicine Hat and Roche mines, cannot be stored. Alberta and Saskatchewan, consequently, depend for their storable coal on the mines of the Crow's Nest Pass, Lethbridge, Bankhead and Taber. Lignite helps out the current supply as long as there is transportation, but when, as was the case last winter, there is transportation difficulty, it is not of much service except, perhaps, to local farmers who have it themselves.

The Present Output

The output of the Crow's Nest is not more than 8,000 tons per day; and most of it is used for making coke for smelters and for steaming, only a comparatively small proportion being available for domestic purposes. The Taber workings are shipping 250 tons a day, and most of this is for stocking purposes. At a pinch the Canada West Coal & Coke Co. and the lesser mines might put out from 750 to 1,000 tons a day. The Galt mines at Lethbridge are producing 700 tons a day. A lot of development work is being done, and before winter their capacity will be increased to over 1,000. The whole of the mines of the neighborhood will be in a position to yield 3,000 tons. Bankhead is putting out 600 tons, and its total capacity, including briquettes, is 1,000. The Souris lignite coal fields yield 450 to 500 tons. Morinville mines are said to be putting out more. It is estimated that there will be 100,000 tons of coal in store along the C.P.R. west of Winnipeg by the time winter sets in.

Canadian Northern Criticized.

Whether that is sufficient reserve is to be questioned. It is, however, better than last year. Parts which will be in worse situation are those along the Canadian Northern Railway, where practically none is being accumulated. The same railway is said to be hampering Winnipeg wood dealers. A report presented recently by the fuel inspector shows that almost every Winnipeg dealer has wood along the Canadian Northern lines, but is unable to get cars to bring it into the city. Fuel is high without the price being unnecessarily enhanced by a paucity of supply, accentuated by the railway, in the best months of the year, not being able to transport it. What the condition of affairs will be when the wheat is moving and later, if severe weather interferes with the transit, can be conjectured.

Demoralizing the People.

What fills the political air of Canada now with "graft" and suspicions of "graft" asked Prof. Goldwin Smith at the conclusions of an article in The Canadian Magazine, entitled "Party Government." What is imperiling the integrity of judicial appointments and thus assailing the last stronghold of public right and purity of Government? What but the necessities of party, which compel it to pay its adherents? Our people are good, but corruption will gradually work downwards. It has its instruments in party organizations and conventions, which though the people are not aware of it practically take the elections out of their hands. Government thus becomes standing machinery for the demoralization of the people.

Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2000 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2,500 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 150 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date, production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont., are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

By N. B. WHARTON, Fiscal Agent, ASHLAND, WISCONSIN

On to Willow Creek!

Recent discoveries at Willow Creek, in the Greenwater Copper region, have caused a rush of excited miners. The Baltic strike and other explorations of neighboring ground are unquestionably authentic. We have identically the same indications on our Providence group, located near the mouth of Willow Creek. Water is plentiful but transportation hitherto has been difficult. Now the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad has extended into Death Valley, and Willow Creek is attracting capital, and the town of that name contains a thousand souls.

THE GUGGENHEIM-GREENWATER COPPER COMPANY

has had a chance to sell its Willow Creek property for much more than it paid for it; but the Company resolved to hold it and make a mine. The company is now selling stock at TEN cents a share. We have a little left which we can let you have

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

Then Dr. Holbrook spoke, but to poor, dazed Maddy his words were all a riddle. It was nothing to him—who was he that he should be dictating thus? There seemed to be a difference of opinion between the young men, Guy insisting that out of pity she should not be rejected; and the doctor demurring on the ground that he ought to be more strict. As usual, Guy overruled, and seating himself at the table, the doctor was just commencing: "I hereby certify——" while Guy was bending over him, when the latter was startled by a hand laid firmly on his arm, and turning quickly he confronted Madeline Clyde, who, with her short hair pushed from her blue-veined forehead, her face as pale as ashes, save where a round spot of purplish red burned upon her cheeks, and her eyes gleaming like coals of fire, stood before him.

"He need not write that," she said, huskily, pointing to the doctor. "It would be a lie, and I could not take it. You do not think me qualified. I heard you say so. I do not want to be pitied. I do not want a certificate because I am so young and you think I'll feel badly. I do not want——"

Her voice failed her, her bosom heaved, and the choking sobs came thick and fast, but still she shed no tear, and in her bright, dry eyes there was a look which made both those young men turn away involuntarily. Once Guy tried to excuse her failure, saying she no doubt was frightened. She would probably do better again, and might as well accept the certificate, but Madeline still said no, so decidedly that further remonstrance was useless. She would not take what she had no right to, she said, but if they pleased she would wait there in the back office until her grandfather came back; it would not be long, and she should not trouble them.

Guy brought her the easy-chair from the front room and placed it for her by the window. With a faint smile she thanked him and said: "You are very kind," but the smile hurt Guy cruelly, it was so sad, so full of unintentional reproach, while the eyes she lifted to his looked so grieved and weary that he insensibly murmured to himself: "Poor child!" as he left her, and with the doctor repaired to the house, where Agnes was impatiently waiting for them. Poor, poor little Madge! Let those smile who may at her distress; it was the first keen disappointment she had ever had, and it crushed her as completely as many an older person has been crushed by heavier calamities.

"Disgraced for ever and ever," she kept repeating to herself, as she tried to shake off the horrid nightmare stealing over her. "How can I hold up my head again at home where nobody will understand just how it was—nobody but grandpa and grandma? Oh, grandpa, I can't earn that thirty-six dollars now. I most wish I was dead, and I am—I am dying. Somebody—come—quick!"

There was a heavy fall, and while in Mrs. Conner's parlor Guy Remington and Dr. Holbrook were chatting gayly with Agnes, a childish figure was lying upon the office floor, white, stiff, and insensible.

Little Jessie Remington, tired of sitting still and listening to what her mamma and Mrs. Conner were saying, had strayed off into the garden, and after filling her chubby hands with daffodils and early violets, wended her way to the office, the door of which was partially ajar. Peering cautiously in, she saw the crumpled bonnet, with its ribbons of blue, and, attracted by this, advanced into the room, until she came where Madeline was lying. With a feeling that something was wrong, Jessie bent over the prostrate girl, asking if she was asleep, and lifting next the long, fringed lashes drooping on the colorless cheek. The dull, dead expression of the eyes sent a chill through Jessie's frame, and hurrying to the house she cried: "Oh, Brother Guy, somebody's dead in the office, and her bonnet is all jammed!"

Scarcely were the words uttered ere Guy and the doctor both were with Madeline, the former holding her tenderly in his arms, while he smoothed the short hair, thinking even then how soft and luxuriant it was, and how fair was the face which never moved a muscle beneath his scrutiny. The doctor was wholly self-possessed. Maddy had no terrors for him now. She needed his services, and he rendered them willingly, applying restoratives which soon brought back signs of life in the rigid form. With a shiver and a moan Madeline whispered: "Oh, grandma, I'm so tired," and nestled closer to the bosom where she had never dreamed of lying.

By this time both Mrs. Conner and Agnes had come out, asking in much surprise who the stranger could be, and what was the cause of her illness. As if there had been a previous understanding between them, the doctor and Guy were silent with regard to the recent farce enacted there, simply saying it was possible she was in the habit of fainting; many people were. Very daintily Agnes held up and back the skirt of her rich silk, as if fearful it might come in contact with Madeline's plain delaine; then, as it was not very interesting for her to stand and see the doctor "make so much fuss over a young girl," as she mentally expressed it, she returned to the house, bidding Jessie do the same. But Jessie chose to stay by Maddy, whom they placed upon the comfortable lounge, which she preferred to being taken to the house, as Guy proposed.

"I'm better now, much better," she said "Leave me, please. I'd rather be alone."

So they left her, all but Jessie, who, fascinated by the sweet young face, climbed upon the lounge and, laying her curly head caressingly against Madeline's arm, said to her: "Poor girl, you're sick, and I'm so sorry. What makes you sick?"

There was genuine sympathy in that little voice, and it opened the pent-up flood beating so tumultuously, and roused Maddy's heart. With a cry as of sudden pain she clasped the child in her arms and wept out a wild, stormy fit of weeping which did her so much good. Forgetting that Jessie could not understand, and feeling it a relief to tell her grief to someone, she said, in reply to Jessie's oft-repeated inquiries as to what was the matter: "I did not get a certificate, and I wanted it so much, for we are poor, and our house is mortgaged, and I was going to help grandpa pay it."

"It's dreadful to be poor!" sighed little Jessie, as her waxen fingers threaded the soft, nut-brown hair resting in her lap, where Maddy had laid her aching head.

Maddy did not know who this beautiful child was, but her sympathy was very sweet, and they talked together as children will, until Mrs Agnes' voice was heard calling to her little girl that it was time to go.

"I love you, Maddy, and I mean to tell brother about it," Jessie said, as she wound her arms around Madeline's neck and kissed her at parting.

It never occurred to Maddy to ask her name, so stupefied she felt, and with a responsive kiss she sent her away. Leaning her head upon the table, she forgot all but her own wretchedness, and so did not see the gayly dressed, haughty-looking lady who swept past the door, accompanied by Guy and Dr Holbrook. Neither did she hear, or notice, if she did, the hum of their voices as they talked together for a moment, Agnes asking the doctor very prettily to come up to Aikenside while she was there, and bring his lady-love. Engaged young men like Guy were so stupid, she said, as with a merry laugh she sprang into the carriage; and, bowing gracefully to the doctor, was driven rapidly toward Aikenside.

Rather slowly the doctor returned to the office, and after fidgeting for a time among the powders and phials summoned courage to ask Madeline how she felt, and if any of the fainting symptoms had returned.

"No, sir," was all the reply she gave him, never lifting up her head or even thinking which of the two young men it was speaking to her.

There was a call just then for Dr. Holbrook, and leaving his office in charge of Tom, his chore boy, he went away, feeling slightly uncomfortable whenever he thought of the girl to whom he felt that justice had not been done.

"I half wish I had examined her myself," he said. "Of course she was excited, and could not answer; beside, hanged if I don't believe it was all humbug tormenting her with Greek and Latin. Yes; I'll question her when I get back, and if she'll possibly pass, give her the certificate. Poor child, how white she was, and what a queer look there was in those great eyes, when she said, 'I shall not take it.'"

RACE HORSES THE FASTEST.

Nature Student Gives Figures Showing How Fast Animals Are.

Ernest Thompson says: The speed of the coyote is great, and has often been the subject of admiring comment, but I think it has been overrated. After collecting data of various kinds, such as actual known records of dogs and horses, also the comparative records of dogs and hares, or horses and foxes, wolves and hounds, hounds and automobiles I have attempted a scale of comparative speeds:

	Min.	Sec
Blooded race horses covers a mile in about	1	40
Pronghorned antelope	1	50
First-class greyhound	2	0
Jack rabbit	2	10
Common fox	2	20
Northern coyote	2	30
Foxhound	2	40
American gray wolf	3	0

Many hunters would set the kit fox or swift above the greyhound, especially for a short race, but I have had no personal experience with the species in a chase. The little prairie cottontail can, I believe, get away from the swift in a hundred-yard dash; they cannot keep it up for long, but their initial velocity is incredible, and baffles the eye. Not a leg, not a rabbit is to be seen; nothing but a white streak across the prairie, till it promptly disappears in some burrow.

What actually counts in the race is, as usual, the trifle more speed that each animal can command.

Coyote Is Faster.

For example, the gray wolf makes 650 yards to the minute, and the coyote about 700. But that 50 yards makes all the difference between living and dying. That 50 yards margin is probably the foothold on which the whole coyote race has been built up.

It is a well-known principle that the special development of an animal is its most variable part. Thus the peculiar bell in the throat of a moose varies enormously, the bill of the long-billed curlew, the neck feather of the ruff, the spots of the ocelot, the white bands of the skunk, the horns of the elk, are so varied that rarely two are found just alike. Speed is one of the peculiarities of the coyote, as it is of the greyhound, and we must, therefore, look for great variations of rate. I have selected an average for my calculations, but there are occasional individuals, coyotes of rare gifts, whose speed and endurance would put them very near the top of our scale.

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is to itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strengthen these Nerves—re-establish them as needed, with

IMMIGRATION FALLING OFF.

Decrease Expected to Shorten Farm Help in the United States.

Immigration from the United States into Canada continues to decrease. The returns for April and May show the total number reported as coming at all frontier points as 18,588, as compared with 18,710 in the same months of 1906, a decrease of 16 per cent. At the ocean ports there was an increase of 39 per cent.—namely, 73,183 for the two months this year against 52,794 in the same months of 1906.

Reports from the Canadian agents in various parts of the United States in reference to the falling off show that immense tracts of good land in Texas and other states are being offered for settlement at lower prices than they can be obtained in the Canadian northwest, where the railway and other facilities are as favorable as they are on the other side of the line.

The high prices at which the fertile lands of the Canadian northwest are held by speculators is giving an advantage to the holders of American unoccupied farming areas, which as a natural consequence is calculated to still further divert the volume of American settlers from the Canadian to the United States west.

A Buried City.

A Canadian archaeologist, who has for some time been engaged in excavation work on the site of some ancient buildings in Texas, announces that he has, as the result of his labors, discovered the undoubted traces of a large city of great antiquity. There is conclusive proof that the city flourished at a period anterior to the Aztec epoch. The ruins are at a considerable depth below the surface, and little information is yet to be obtained. The Aztecs were the people whom the Spaniards found in Mexico, and there is evidence that they displaced a former race, the Toltecs at an early period. But long before the times of Cortes there had been successive waves of population that had spread over North and South America. Leaving out the Eskimos of the Polar regions, the primitive Americans are generally regarded as of one race, the earliest settlers coming from Asia. It has been suggested that America and Asia were in those pre-historic times connected by an isthmus where there is now the Behring Straits. What was remarkable about the Toltecs and Aztecs was the high degree of civilization to which they had risen, and such civilization is in itself proof of a long period of development. To the elucidation of this long story a buried city may materially contribute.

Prizes of $30 will be given in each section.

Manlike.

Breathless they stood at last upon the towering Adirondack peak.

"There," she said angrily, "we have climbed all this distance to admire the beauties of nature, and we left the glass at home."

Tranquilly smiling, he shifted the lunch basket to the other arm.

"Never mind, dear," he said. "It won't hurt us just this once to drink out of the bottle."

Mr. Geo. Yeates will soon instal a hat cleaning machine in his shaving parlor.

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles south of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section and only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprate district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and with with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the west portion of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Noted Evangelist's Exserience

Irene, Ills., Oct. 2—"I always praise the bridge that carries me over safely are the words of J. Dimick Taylor, the great American Evangelist, whose home is in Irene. While in Nova Scotia last winter I needed medicine and used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They helped me wonderfully and I recommended them to others. I send this testimonial because your remedy will work directly on the kidneys, and cures the urinal disorders that often give pain to the man and woman affected with kidney trouble. I have not found anything equal to Dr. Hamilton's Mandrake and Butternut Pills. I gave them to a man on Tan Cook Island that was suffering in a most horrible way and in a few hours he was relieved.

When a minister like Mr. Taylor comes forth in praise of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, it is evident their power is beyond the ordinary. For diseases of the kidneys, bladder, liver and stomach they have no equal. Easy to take, very mild, sure to cure, 25 cents per box at all dealers.

MIXED IN THE THUNDER.

A Scene in "Macbeth" That Was Not on the Playbill.

It is related of Cooke, the actor, that when a youth, being without the necessary cash to pay for a seat "in front," he got behind the scenes one night and hid himself in a barrel. He had for companions two large cannon balls, but the youth, not being initiated into the mysteries of the place, did not suspect that cannon balls helped to make thunder in a barrel as well as in a twenty-four pounder.

The play was "Macbeth," and in the first scene the thunder was required to give due effect to the situation of the crouching witches. It was not long ere the Jupiter Tonans of the theater, alias the property men, approached and seized the barrel, and the horror of the concealed boy may be imagined as the man proceeded to cover the open end with a piece of old carpet and tie it carefully to prevent the thunder from being split.

Cooke was profoundly and heroically silent. The machine was lifted by the brawny stage servitor and carried carefully to the side scene lest in rolling the thunder should rumble before its cue.

All was made ready, the witches took their places amid flames of resin, the thunder bell rang, the barrel received its impetus with young Cooke and the cannon balls, the stage stricken lad roaring lustily, to the amusement of the thunderer, who neglected to stop the rolling machine, which entered on the stage, and Cooke, bursting off the carpet head of the barrel, appeared before the audience, to the horror of the weird sisters and to the hilarity of the spectators.—London Mail.

MUSHROOMS.

Those That Are Poisonous Always Carry the "Death Cup."

Mushrooms when poisonous are the most dangerous plants in existence, as there is no antidote for the poison. Without going into the intricacies of the edible "meadow" (Agaricus campestris), and the "horse" mushroom (Agaricus arvensis), which are among the most wholesome and valuable vegetables, and of the numerous other harmless and nutritious varieties, as distinguished by their dark spores from the poisonous kind with white spores, one rule of observation will preserve the health and safety of any one collecting wild mushrooms for eating. Without the use of a single technical term, the difference in poisonous and nonpoisonous mushrooms is easily shown, even to a novice. What botanists call the "death cup," the volva around the stipe, or, in plainer terms, the socket around the stem, is never absent from the deadly mushrooms. Sometimes it is distinct, well above ground, up around the lower part of the stem; then again it is below ground, but not attached to the stem so as to lose the cup shape, and sometimes it grows upon or is attached to the stem, giving it a bulbous, swollen base. Summarily reject every plant that has a bulbous stem or the cup standing out around the stem. All edible and harmless mushrooms have straight stems, the same size from the root to the cap.—Georgia Torrey Donovan in Good Housekeeping.

Mystification.

His weakness was procrastination. His wife detested lying and constantly urged him to mend his ways. One morning she said: "Will, see if you can't be perfectly truthful today. Don't tell a lie. Now, promise!" He promised and went away to work. When he came home to dinner, she said:

"Dear, did you keep your promise?"

"I did," he replied soberly.

Then he caught her in his arms.

"Darling," he cried, "I will not lie to you. When I said I had kept my promise to you, I did not tell the truth; but, believe me, that was the only lie I told all day."

For twenty-two seconds she was lost in perplexity. Then she gave it up; the problem was too deep for her.

The Part He Lost.

A New England man tells of a prosperous Connecticut farmer painfully exact in money matters who married a widow of Greenwich possessing in her own right the sum of $10,000. Shortly after the wedding a friend met the farmer, to whom he offered congratulations, at the same time observing, "It's a good thing for you, Maleski, a marriage that means $10,000 to you." "Not quite that, Bill," said the farmer; "not quite that." "Why," exclaimed the friend, "I understood there was every cent of $10,000 in it for you." "I had to pay $2 for a marriage license," said Maleski.

Gnawed His Way Out of Prison.

A burglar named Schaarschmidt, in prison at Gera, deliberately set to work to gnaw through a thick oaken beam in front of his cell window. It was a work of seven weeks. The fragments of wood which were torn away with his teeth he replaced with chewed bread until the beam was almost gnawed through. A final smashing noise was heard by the wardens, but before they could appear Schaarschmidt had escaped.—London Chronicle.

Just the Same as Usual.

"I thought you said you weren't going to drink any more?"

"I did."

"But here you are drinking as much as ever."

"Well, that isn't any more, is it?"

New Hack and Bus Business

It will be remembered, that The Times, some weeks ago, noted that Mr. Bruce Lee, formerly proprietor of the inter Simcoe-Charlotte street livery stables, had recently joined the popular livery business of Messrs. McCollum Bros., Water street. Since this amalgamation the new firm has decided to re-establish the former successful cab and bus business formerly operated. The new firm will undoubtedly do a flourishing business.

Of Interest To Women.

To such women as are not seriously out of health, but who have exacting duties to perform, either in the way of household cares or in social duties and functions which seriously tax their strength, as well as to nursing mothers, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has proved a most valuable supporting tonic and invigorating nervine. By its timely use, much serious sickness and suffering may be avoided. The operating table and the surgeons' knife, would, it is believed, seldom have to be employed if this most valuable woman's remedy were resorted to in good time. The "Favorite Prescription" has proven a great boon to expectant mothers by preparing the system for the coming of baby, thereby rendering childbirth safe, easy, and almost painless.

Bear in mind, please that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is not a secret or patent medicine, against which the most intelligent people are quite naturally averse, because of the uncertainty as to their composition and harmless character, but is a MEDICINE OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, a full list of all its ingredients being printed, in plain English, on every bottle-wrapper. An examination of this list of ingredients will disclose the fact that it is non-alcoholic in its composition, chemically pure, triple-refined glycerine taking the place of the commonly used alcohol, in its make-up. In this connection it may not be out of place to state that the "Favorite Prescription" of Dr. Pierce is the only medicine put up for the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, and sold through druggists, all the ingredients of which have the unanimous endorsement of all the leading medical writers and teachers of all the several schools of practice, and that too as remedies for the ailments for which "Favorite Prescription" is recommended.

A little book of these endorsements will be sent to any address, post-paid, and absolutely free if you request same by postal card, or letter, of Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. Easy to take as candy.

Big Changes are Coming in the Work of Doctors

Private Practice Will Disappear to be Replaced by the Public Health Officer, Whose Work will be in the Direction of Prevention Rather Than Cure

London, Oct. 3.—The change the practice of medicine is undergoing was the keynote of several addresses made by leading London doctors at the opening of the winter session of the medical schools connected with the London hospitals. The speakers said the day was coming when the doctors in private practice would disappear, and be replaced by the public health officer, whose work would lie in the prevention, rather than in the cure, of disease.

Dr. Ewart told the students that the profession was in the throes of a double crisis, economical and professional. He declared that the growing success in reducing the prevalence of disease and the growth of specialism had contracted the field of general practice, and the process was bound to continue. He said it was inevitable that the profession should become more and more the servant of the state. Henceforth its members must devote themselves to the culture of health preventing, instead of curing disease.

Other addresses of a similar nature were heard, one physician contending that things were moving toward the unique consummation of a calling by its own training and application destroying the very source upon which it depended for its living.

J. J. Turner & Sons will Supply Flags For Rural Schools

That the now world-wide known firm of J. J. Turner & Sons, is rapidly increasing its popularity and consequently gaining orders from all parts of the country is demonstrated by the fact that the Provincial government has, on recommendation of Hon. Dr. Pyne, minister of education, awarded the contract for supplying Union Jack flags for the rural schools of Ontario to this local firm. The price has not yet been made public, but is within the $5,000 allowance passed by the legislature at its last session.

Canada to Restrict Incoming of Aliens

Ottawa, Oct. 2.—The Dominion govern

Ottawa, Oct. 2.—The Dominion government is considering the adoption of the American system of dealing with unwelcome immigrants. The principal proposed change will require all such persons to have sufficient money to assure that they are not likely, for a time at least, to become a charge upon the public. At present the law only bars persons deficient in physique or mentality or with bad moral records.

The indications are that, at the end of the year, the immigration department will be able to report another great increase—possibly 50 per cent— in the number of settlers in Canada. The total for the year is expected to reach, if not exceed, 400,000.

The special envoy of Japan to report on the Japanese question is here and has had conferences with members of the government. It is well understood that the government will insist that there shall be some arrangement by which Canada can control Japanese immigration into this country and the 500 limit strictly enforced. It is confidently expected that the Japanese government will agree to some such an agreement. Meantime Canada will settle any claims for damages from the Vancouver riots.

ARBITRATE FISH ISSUES

As a result of recent despatches between London and Ottawa, the Canadian government is willing to refer to the Hague tribunal the question of the rights of United States fishermen in all Canadian coastal waters. For the sake of maintaining friendly relations with the United States the Dominion has renewed overtures upon its previous to American fishermen in the Atlantic coast waters to which they have no claim, according to treaty rights.

For close on a century was the fishermen of the United States cast for the right to fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and of the Canadian Labrador as well as on the shores of Newfoundland. For many years Canada has had regulations forbidding the use of purse seines and competitions in which boats by Canadians and Americans race for a weekly close season. The fish-canning interests of Canada is in exactly the same position as Newfoundland, whose fishing regulations American fishermen have shown an unwillingness to obey. The treaty has not been signed as yet, but it is beyond question that it will be. And thus a dispute that has caused endless complications will be disposed of.

EXPECT FLYING STEAMERS

There is a strong belief in Canadian railway and steamship circles that important developments soon will be announced in connection with the much talked of trans-Atlantic steamships. That negotiations for a twenty-knot service are in progress at Ottawa and Montreal is the positive declaration of steps usually well informed authorities, and the names of the Canadian Pacific Railroad and the Allan steamship lines are freely mentioned in this connection. It is said that the Canadian Pacific authorities have before them designs from the Fairfield Company, builders of the Atlantic Empresses, for two three-funnelled twenty-six knot steamers and it is stated that the presence of Fairfield officials in Montreal is partly in relation to the project.

Encouraged by the success of the Sheldon Jackson in the Klondike relief service in Alaska, Dr. Grenfell, C.M.G., head of the deep sea mission to Labrador, has been at work on a similar arrangement for Labrador, where both white men and Eskimos have only one domestic animal, the Eskimo dog, an admirable sledge animal, but as savage and as treacherous as a wolf. When Grenfell advanced the proposal, the Canadian government gave him $5,000, and Lord Strathcona, the Harmsworths and others made liberal contributions, so that last July Mr. Wood secured a herd of 300 reindeer on an island off the coast of Norway, and a steamer was chartered for their transportation. All was going well when it was found that the laws of Norway prohibited the exportation dogs. This was obviated, and the reindeer will sail this month with Lapp instructors.

Kick Over Advanced Postage

Some of our local business men and also members of the various local fraternal bodies are sore over the advanced price demanded by the postal authorities. Heretofore, local drop letters were delivered on the writer putting a one cent stamp on the envelope. Now it is necessary to have a 2-cent stamp thereon. While this may cost a little higher than of yore but all modern improvements come high. Anyway, P. M. Lemieux promises to introduce legislation next session providing for a 1-cent postage where letters are delivered. The postal charge is only a kind of holdup anyway, and if Mr. Lemieux keeps his promises, as is anticipated, the kickers will cease to kick.

Mr. Wall, the Dairyman representative took a snap shot with his camera. The photo will be reproduced in the "Dairyman" at an early date.

There Will be a Shrinkage of 25 Per Cent. in Wheat Says Sir Thomas Shaughnessy

Montreal, Oct. 3.—At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company yesterday, the report of the directors was unanimously adopted.

The directors met immediately after the meeting of shareholders, at which meeting Sir William Van Horne was elected chairman of the board; Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the company, and Mr David McNicoll, vice-president; and the following were appointed the Executive Committee; Sir William C. Van Horne, chairman, the Right Hon. Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, Mr Richard B. Angus, Mr. E. B. Osler, M.P., Sir Thomas G. Shaughnessy and Mr David McNicoll.

A resolution was passed authorizing a lease of the St. Mary's & Western Ontario Railway.

An Issue of 4 Per cent. Debenture Stock

An issue of four per cent. debenture stock was authorized for the following purposes;

For acquisition of bonds of the Northern Colonization Railroad, 34 miles, not exceeding $20,000 per mile.

For additional issue on Sudbury branch, not exceeding $10,000 per mile, for 226 miles.

For two lake steamers, £180,000 sterling, and one Pacific Coast steamer, £125,000 sterling.

For Regina, Saskatoon branch, 165 miles, and for extension of Moose Jaw branch, 100 miles, at £4,000 sterling per mile.

New Steamers will be Built for the Atlantic

The board was authorized to arrange for the construction or acquisition of two additional steamships for the Pacific trade, or to build two large and faster boats for the Atlantic service, transferring the Empress of Britain and Empress of Ireland to the Pacific, and to incur necessary capital expenditure therefor.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, in the course of his remarks at the twenty-sixth annual meeting of the C.P.R. yesterday, in moving the adoption of the annual report, stated, in referring to the crops in the Northwest, that the backward spring had caused a shrinkage of 25 per cent. in the marketable wheat as compared with last season. There will, however, be a very considerable increase in the quantity of oats and other grains, so that with the higher price of wheat the farmers of Western Canada will receive in the aggregate quite as much for their produce as they did last year.

Sir Thomas said that, unless the business of the country had a serious setback, and there was no present grounds for such an apprehension, the forward policy will proceed from year to year.

In carrying out these plans the shareholders will be asked to sanction the issue of the balances of the ordinary share capital already authorized to be used as required.

74,000 Officers and Men Now Employed

Speaking of the company's land assets, Sir Thomas stated that the 8,000,000 acres of the original grant which now remains unsold will yield on the average a price per acre considerably higher than heretofore realized. By the end of the present season 361 miles of canals and ditches will have been completed in the western section of the irrigation block, sufficient to water 210,000 acres. The cost of this work will be about $6.50 per mile.

Sir Thomas believes that it will be profitable to irrigate far larger tracks along their main line east of Calgary.

There are now in the service of the company 74,000 officers and employees, with a monthly pay roll of $3,000,000.

Mrs. Douglas D. Lundy Has an At Home

Yesterday afternoon, from four until six o'clock, a notable society function was in evidence at the beautifully surrounded residence of Mr. D. J. Lundy, when many guests passed through the spacious grounds surrounding the house to enjoy the hospitality of this charming hostess.

Mrs. Douglas D. Lundy was "at home," and some scores of her friends accepted the invitation issued and, at the same time gave a couple of hours in pleasant conversation.

Mrs. Lundy, the hostess, was most becomingly attired in black, while her daughter Miss Pearl, was dressed in a cream colored masterpiece of the milliners' art. Mrs. Lundy was assisted by Mrs. Attwood, Mrs. G. W. Rubidge, Mrs. Coulthard, Mrs. R. S. Davidson, Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Lily Pierce and Miss Helen Davies.

Among those present were Mrs. Mootizambert, Mrs. Davies, Mrs. Crosby, Mrs. Haslitt, Mrs. Dixon, Mrs. (Dr.) McCulloch, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. Robt. Kingan, Miss Stevenson, Mrs. C. H. Clementi, Mrs. Crane, Mrs. Burnett, Miss Nan Hall, Miss Jessie Hamilton, Mrs. A. Poe, Mrs. R. W. Grubbe, Miss Birdie Hall, Miss Clementi, Mrs. T. F. Matthews, Mrs. (Rev.) J. C. Davidson, Mrs. J. H. McClellan, the Misses Morrow, Mrs. G. Lech, Mrs. Rich Hall and others.

The dining room was most charmingly decorated with carnations, whilst the hall was prettily decorated with natural marguerites.

A pretty feature of the "at home" was the introduction, or rather admission, of the guests by little Alan Stevenson, a boy role friend of the hostess who acted, pro tem, as page.

The City Fire, Water and Light Committee met last night with the following members present: Mayor R. F. McWilliams, Chairman, Ald. Johnston, Aldermen Bradburn, Duncan and Morgan.

The water commissioners' application for a new hydrant at the corner of Dalhousie and Dublin streets, is to be reported on by the chairman.

The reports of electric street lights not burning on certain nights during last quarter were unusually many, thirteen.

The mayor moved, seconded by Ald. Duncan—That the Peterborough Light and Power Co., be charged for all lights not burning during contract hours, unless the treasurer and chairman of the committee are satisfied that there were very good reasons for them being out.—Carried.

PAY GOOD WAGES.

In discussing the duties of Wilson, the new caretaker of the city buildings, the question of whether he should take care of the rooms in the new fire hall, and assume charge of the furnace in the city buildings, arose. Besides keeping clean the city buildings, Wilson has to act as messenger, delivering notices, etc., which at times takes up considerable time.

The mayor thought Wilson might look after the furnace in the city buildings, and also the bedrooms in the new fire hall. Under present arrangements, the Parnell boys, fire hall drivers, take care of the bedrooms for which they receive $50 a year each, and Sam Wainwright looks after the city buildings furnace, for which he is paid $90. And should the mayor's suggestion be adopted the assumption follows that Wainwright's present salary would be reduced by $90, and the Parnell boys' wages reduced by $50 a year.

Ald. Morgan contended that these men are not being paid any too much now, and it would be unfair to take any steps that would reduce their present income. He is a believer in civic employes being well paid, and would not agree to any action which would reduce their present wages. He contended that the present arrangements with Wainwright and the Parnell boys should stand, and that they should not suffer owing to the engagement of a new employe. He thought Wainwright should look after the furnace in the new fire hall, and when that in the city buildings, which would equalize things as far as those two men are concerned. As to looking after the bedrooms, he opined the present arrangements to be perfectly satisfactory to all concerned.

Ald. Bradburn offered that no change in present conditions should be made this year.

Ald. Johnston contended that money might be spent in many a worse direction than in giving fair wages to the city's employes, to which Ald. Morgan heartily agreed.

An agreement on this question will be probably arrived at between the different committees, and it finally decided by the Committee of the Whole next Monday night, so far as this year's council is concerned at any rate.

Local Advertising Expert is Married

Mr. J. C. Edward's, of Cressman's Store, is Now a Benedict

On Tuesday in the city of Belleville, one of Peterborough's brightest advertising men and most talented decorative artists in the person of Mr. J. C. Edwards of A. W. Cressman's dry goods emporium, joined the large circle of benedicts.

The charming bride was Miss N. McMantell of Tilsonburg, Rev. C. B. Emmerson, Baptist pastor, tied the nuptial knot. The ceremony was witnessed by only the immediate attendants. The bride wore a handsome travelling gown of blue invisible striped broadcloth. Her hat was a toque shape trimmed with blue French roses.

The happy couple have returned to Peterborough, and will reside at 410 Charlotte street, where they will be at home to their friends after November 1st.

Sad Fatality at Kawatha Lakes

Seven Year Old Francis Costello Drowned at Stony Lake

Another sad fatality has occurred by the cruel waters of Stony Lake, which on Tuesday took to his death a seven-year-old boy, Francis Costello, son of Mr. M. Costello, of 472 Park street.

It seems that the poor little fellow went, on account of ill-health, to visit his uncle, Mr. P. Young of Young's Point. On Tuesday the boy went by Mr. Young's steamer, the "Stony Lake" as far as Mr. A. L. Davis' cottage, Stony Lake, where the boat was temporarily tied up. Here in some way, unseen by man, the boy must have, whilst playing about, fallen overboard and was drowned. His absence was missed and all aboard the steamer did their utmost to discover his whereabouts. The sad truth was, at last disclosed when Constable Collard, of Stony Lake, found the body, which was taken to Lakefield. This is a sad terminus to an otherwise joyous season and the poor boy's father will receive the heartfelt sympathy of the community.

Lindsay seems to have bad boys as well as this city. Chief of Police Vercoe of Lindsay on Monday took two boys to the Reformatory, Toronto. They got five years each.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

Can't Get Concessions by Threatening the Mayor with Loss of Votes at Elections

His Worship Told Mr. T. Moore this Last Night, and the Board of Works Supported Him—Cost of Benson Ave. Sewer Estimated by the City Engineer at $1,554

The City Board of Works met last night, when there were present; Mayor R. F. McWilliams, Chairman, Ald. Duncan, Aldermen Johnston, Bradburn, McIntyre, Wilson and Morgan.

Mr. F. W. Doane, of the Bell Telephone Co., wrote stating that between the sidewalk and their new buildings on Hunter street, there was a space unfilled. He asked that this which belonged to the city be filled in before winter sets in. He also asked that a cement corrugated driveway be made over the sidewalk at the west end of the building.

On motion of the mayor, seconded by Ald. Johnston, the board decided to recommend that the space between the company's building and the sidewalk be filled in, and a corrugated cement approach made as asked for.

QUESTION OF DRAINAGE.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, secretary of the Geo. Matthews Co., wrote asking that the ditch in front and side of their new store on Sherbrooke street, be cement tiled to carry off surface water, and allow of a better approach.

On motion of Ald. Johnston, seconded by Ald. Wilson, the drain pipe on Sherbrooke street, will be continued to the corner of Park, and the necessary filling in on Park street, fronting this store, attended to.

MORE CROSSINGS.

Ald. Morgan urged that cement crossings be laid opposite the English church and Methodist church, in ward five.

On motion of Ald McIntyre, seconded by Ald. Johnston, these crossings will be constructed.

A cement crossing is also to be laid across Hunter street, from Queen street to St. John's church.

Ald Johnston asked that the board crossing on Park street to Mr. Parker's house be construct d properly.

The chairman said he was surprised to notice the other day that this work had not been done according to his instructions. The grievance will be remedied shortly.

GOOD ROADS.

Ald Wilson moved, seconded by the mayor.—That the engineer be instructed to examine all sewer connections constructed this year, and in all cases where the roads have not been replaced in good condition the city do the work and charge cost of same up to the contractor.—Carried.

Ald. Wilson said the Gas Company are very culpable as to leaving the roads in bad condition after excavation, and the city should get after them.

The mayor contended that the only way to make this company leave the streets in what the city considered to be a good state of repair, would be to enter a law suit against them.

Ald Wilson—"We have been sounding away all summer to get the Street Railway Company to fix up between their tracks, but without effect."

The Board decided to notify the Street Railway company that unless this work is done shortly, the city will undertake it at the company's expense.

G.T.R. SIDINGS.

The Grand Trunk's application for permission to lay two new sidings and necessary switches at the intersection of Dalhousie and Wolfe street, to connect with their main line on Bethune street, was next taken up.

The mayor moved, seconded by Ald. McIntyre.—That the property owners on Bethune and Aylmer, and Wolfe and Sherbrooke, in vicinity of these proposed new sidings, be notified of the application before the council, and be requested to file any objections they may have thereto with the city clerk, on or before next Wednesday.—Carried.

SIDEWALKS.

The petition for a concrete walk on south side of Townsend street, from Stewart to Park, being at last sufficiently signed, the petition was granted.

Ald McIntyre's motion that a concrete walk on Perry street, from George to Aylmer, north side, and no second.

On motion of Ald. Wilson, the plank walk on north side of Lansdowne street will be repaired where possible, and where not possible, then removed.

CAN'T BE COERCED.

Mr. T. Moore appeared before the board, and contended that his building at the corner of St. Joseph and Charlotte streets is not built on the street line, according to the inference taken from reported proceedings of the Board of Works on his petition for a sidewalk. His building he claimed is built according to proper survey, and not on the street line.

The board pointed out that no reference could be taken from the actual proceedings of the board. A resolution was passed that a sidewalk could not be built on St. Joseph street until the street line had been properly surveyed. No suggestion whatever was made that Mr. Moore had built on the street line.

Mr. Moore has been for some time asking that a concrete walk be built opposite his property, either by the city or himself.

The mayor told Mr. Moore candidly that he would not vote in favor of his petition for three reasons. First, he objected to any citizen building his own walk, on the same conditions as though built by the city. Secondly, Mr. Moore will get exactly the same treatment in this request as any other citizen. The walk in question will be constructed in its proper turn; as it is his position was in too late for action this year. There are many other petitions preceding his. Thirdly, Mr. Moore came to him, condemned the Board of Works, and threatened him (the mayor) with what would happen to him next year in the event of his petition not be granted. "And," concluded the mayor, "I am not going to be threatened into any particular course by Mr. Moore or any other man."

SEWER CONNECTION GRANTED.

On motion of Ald. Johnston, Mr. Martin J. Kirn will be permitted to connect his premises on Stewart street with the Reid street sewer; he to pay $25 for such privilege and cost of said connections, until such time as the sewer runs past his premises, when he will pay the ordinary rate.

MORE SEWERS.

A pipe sewer will be built this year on Bethune street, from London to Dublin streets.

COST OF BENSON AVE. SEWER.

The city engineer submitted the following comparative estimates for drainage of Benson avenue and the Normal school.

Plan A—For serving all houses on Benson avenue, between Smith street and Short street, with a maximum cut of 11 feet—$900.

Plan B—For serving the Normal school by a trunk sewer, across the the park and discharging into Barnardo avenue sewer, with a maximum depth of cut of 5 feet 9 inches—$591.

Plan C—For serving all houses on Benson avenue, between Smith street and the Dixon Park, as well as the Normal school, by way of Smith St., with a maximum depth of cut of 24 feet 6 inches—$2485.

By building as per plans A and B the local cost will be $1554, as against $2485 for plan C, a difference in cost of $931.

Plan A and B are being followed for Benson avenue sewer, as advised by the engineer.

SIDEWALK GRANTED

Ald Morgan again urged that a wooden sidewalk be laid on Hunter street north, from end of present sidewalk to the bridge. All Morgan's persistent efforts in this direction met with their reward last night, and this walk will be built right away.

The board then adjourned.

—Things were busy at the corner of Georg and Charlotte streets yesterday. The Bell Telephone Company had a gang of men busy laying underground conduits to connect the George street line and the street railway people had their tracks up placing new sleepers under the rails. Traffic on the street railway was not disturbed however.

Transformations

Curious Results When Coffee Drinking is Abandoned

It is almost as hard for an old coffee toper to quit the use of coffee as it is for a whiskey or tobacco fiend to break off, except that the coffee user can quit coffee and take up Postum without any feeling of a loss of the morning beverage. For, when Postum is well boiled and served with cream, it is nearly equal in point of flavor than most of the coffee served nowadays, and is the result of the combination of the field of fine, mild Java.

A great transformation takes place in the body within ten days or two weeks after coffee is left off and Postum used for the reason that the poison in the coffee—caffeine—has been discharged and in its place is found in the Postum the liquid food elements of nourishment.

It is easy to make this test and prove these statements by examination of "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

INDUSTRIAL TROUBLES

In his address to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, President Cockshutt says:

"One of the most regrettable features of the labor situation is the steady growth in the number and importance of industrial disputes. According to the Labor Gazette there were 128 strikes in Canada during the twelve months of 1906, the largest for any year on record, with the single exception of 1903. The number of people directly affected was 26,041, and the actual loss of working days was 459,775. Even at the low estimate of $1.50 per day, this means a direct loss to the working people of our country for one year of $738,662. And yet it represents but a fraction of the loss to the community at large, for to it we must add the loss entailed upon manufacturers and employers through the suspension and disorganization of their business, as well as the general falling off in trade by reason of the diminished purchasing power of our labor classes.

"From whatever point of view they may be regarded, strikes are always to be deplored. As a prominent welfare worker in the Association recently remarked, 'You never win but you lose.' Financially they are a dead loss to the country, for in stopping the wheels of industry, they stop production, and production is the only way to increase wealth. Socially, they create conditions conducive to violence and lawlessness on the one hand and suffering and privation on the other. For these reasons I am of the opinion that our Association would be undertaking a noble work if it would devise means of reducing the number of industrial disputes."

It is a pity that industrial disputes should exist to the extent above noted, says the Brantford Expositor in an editorial comment, despite the various preventive agencies now in force, and the manner must be accounted for largely by the tendency of toilers to take advantage of prosperous times to better their own conditions. Fortunately there is no occasion for despair, as educative influences are at work which in the near future must make both strikes and lockouts an impossibility.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION

A committee of the Massachusetts Legislature commission has been studying the systems of industrial education in various European countries and has made a comprehensive and most instructive report on the subject. As has been frequently intimated, the chief industrial countries of Europe are considerably ahead of America in this respect, in any case in schools supported or aided by the state. Even in Ireland, "most distressful" as that country is commonly esteemed to be, no less than a million dollars a year is spent by the government for industrial instruction in non-agriculture and handicrafts.

There is room for a wide difference of opinion as to the propriety of state aid to such branches of instruction. That doubtedly there is danger of class partiality in it. If instruction is given at public cost in one trade or business, equity would seem to require that it be given in any other which may be demanded, and, in brief, in all. And if it be given in the trades, it should be given also in the professions, until the state would be furnishing for all its citizens the university ideal of affording any person instruction in any branch of learning. That would accord with the socialist idea, of making the state a sort of universal factotum or earthly providence. Those who dissent from socialistic doctrines frequently hold that the state's appropriate function is to give to all a thorough grounding in the fundamental branches, and to leave the private initiative and effort the training of candidates for trades, businesses and professions.

What is not to be disputed, however, is the need of more extended, systematic and thorough industrial education in America. Hitherto the plenitude and diversity of our natural resources have given this continent an enormous advantage over others in the industrial race. But with the progressive diminution of those resources America is put more and more upon the same basis of operations as other countries and is more constrained to make use of every means of excelling in arts. The careful husbanding of some of our natural supplies has become as necessary here as in the Old World, and the thorough training of artisans of all kinds is also becoming as necessary.

To Benefit by the French Treaty

Ottawa, Oct. 2.—The new Franco-Canadian tariff treaty, just drafted in Paris, will affect also Canada's tariff duties on imports from Japan and from other nations included in the most favored nation clause of Canadian trade treaties. Under that clause all British countries, Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Korea, Denmark, France, Algeria and French colonies, Japan, Siberia, Morocco, Persia, Russia, Sweden, Salvador, and Venezuela are entitled in return for trade and tariff privileges granted Canada to the tariff rates granted the most favored nation.

The provisions of the new agreement with France are, of course, not yet published, but it may be taken for granted that the principal concessions given to France will be on wines, champagnes, and silks exported to Canada in Canada's import trade with France. In 1906 Canada imported French silks and silk fabrics, valued at $678,282, and wines valued at $1,019,839 From Japan last year Canada imported silks to the value of $471,565, this being the chief item of Japan's exports to this country. Under the treaty with Japan any tariff concession granted France on silks must also be granted to Japan. Consequently it will be seen that Japanese silk exporters will likely profit by the new treaty effected with France.

In respect to the other chief item of the tariff changes that affecting the tariff on wines and champagne, Spain is the only other country chiefly concerned in the Canadian trade and it is not thought that the treaty affects Spain.

GIRLS OF TODAY ARE WEAKLINGS

Few Possess the Vitality and Girlish Beauty of the Olden Times.

Never before was physical health and vigor so highly esteemed and so eagerly sought for as to-day.

No man finds happiness in a sickly wife, and the woman who wishes to enjoy the pleasures of life should spare no effort to maintain perfect health.

Is your daughter growing up strong and ruddy? Has she strength to drink in greedily all the pleasures that youth so zealously seeks—or is she compelled to use the street car instead of enjoying the delightful exercise of walking—does she after the ball arise refreshed and vigorous, or is she exhausted, indifferent, and perhaps irritable?

When strength and vigor can be so easily maintained by Ferrozone, when the glow of health is so quickly brought in the cheeks and elasticity to the step, it is plainly a mother's duty to see that Ferrozone is on hand to assist her daughter back to health.

Upon the wake of Ferrozone follows quickly a stream of rich, nourishing blood which imparts that power and surplus energy so earnestly desired by those in ill-health.

Stop and think what this means for your daughter—certainly a great deal, and it can be accomplished by Ferrozone.

Every growing girl and young woman derives enormous benefit in many ways from this nutritive, vitalizing tonic.

It is especially suited for young women and is a guarantee of health and regularity as long as it is used.

Ferrozone is free from alcohol and is perfectly safe to use. Prepared in the form of chocolated tablet and sold in 50c. boxes or six for $2.50, at all dealers.

YORKSHIRE PIES.

How Is the Way They Were Made in the Olden Days.

The delicacy of the Yorkshire pies of olden days may be judged by the following recipe from an old fashioned cookery book: "First make a good standing crust, let the wall and bottom be very thick; bone a turkey, a goose, a fowl, a partridge and a pigeon; season them all very well; take half an ounce of mace, half an ounce of nutmegs, a quarter of an ounce of cloves and half an ounce of black pepper, all beat fine together; two large spoonfuls of salt, and then mix them together. Open the fowls all down the back and bone them, first the pigeon, then the partridge; cover them; then the fowl, then the goose and then the turkey, which must be large; season them all well first and lay them in the crust so that it will look only like a whole turkey; then have a hare ready cased and wiped with a clean cloth; cut it to pieces that is, joint it; season it and lay it as close as you can on one side; on the other side woodcock, more game and what sort of wild fowl you can get. Season them well and lay them close; put at least four pounds of butter into the pie, then lay on your lid, which must be a very thick one, and let it be well baked. It must have a very hot oven and will take at least four hours." It is not surprising to find that a footnote adds that the crust requires a bushel of flour.—Chambers' Journal.

A CLEVER REPORTER.

He Got the Interview Word For Word and Took No Notes.

Interviewer—I have come to get your views on the proposed change in the curriculum of the school.

Mr. Swelhead—Curriculum! What's that mean? I'm against it, whatever it is.

Mr. Swelhead (reading the report of the interview in the next morning's paper)—"Our distinguished townsman, Mr. M. T. Swelhead, was found at his charming home, surrounded by abundant indications of ripe scholarship and sturdy common sense. In reply to our representative's questions he said, 'I do not desire to force my opinions upon the public, but this I will say, that I have given to this question long and studious attention, incidentally examining upon the curriculas of institutions of learning, both at home and abroad, and, although I found in the existing course of study not a few matters for condemnation, still I cannot say that I should advise any radical change until I have further time to examine into the subject.'" By George, that fellow's got my exact language word for word. And he didn't take notes neither. Jiminy, but what a memory that fellow must have!—London Telegraph.

A London Lad's Prayer.

W. Pett Ridge, a London writer, made a London boy in one of his stories offer the following rather original prayer: "Lord, wilt thou 'ave the kindness to make me grow strong and tall and with plenty to say for meself, and wilt thou do this as soon as thou can find time, so's to save me expense and waste of money that might be used in other ways—say for a cricket bat? Believe me, Lord, thy obedient servant, A. Martin."

He rose. He was halfway into his blue flannel bed gown when an important idea occurred to him, and he knelt down again quickly.

"Should 'ave mentioned," he whispered, "Elfred Martin of 53 Cawstle street, jest over Surrey side of Southark bridge."

Water Transportation Cheap.

Any class of water transportation is incomparably cheaper than land transportation, unless something better than the modern railroad is invented. For this reason the greater part of our domestic or inland tonnage has been and is carried by water and not by rail. For that reason the railways own the largest steamers on the lakes. The wheat trade was lost to the Mississippi, not by competition, but because the railroads did not bring it there. The Mississippi above Cairo is decadent, not for lack of ability to compete, but for lack of commerce, which is to say accessibility by means of its own tributaries. Charles D. Stewart in Century.

Nothing Doing.

The musician was visibly annoyed.

"But, bang it all," he said, "I told your reporter three or four times over that the violin I used was a genuine Stradivarius, and here in his report this morning there's not a word—not a word!"

With a scornful laugh the editor replied:

"That is as it should be, sir. When Mr. Stradivarius gets his fiddles advertised in this paper under $2 a line, you come around and let me know."

A Fine Morning.

"Fine morning, your honor," affably remarked the man who had been arrested the night before for being drunk and disorderly.

"Yes, indeed," responded the justice, "quite a fine morning—in fact, a ten dollar fine morning."

Golden Measure.

"In Australia," bragged the native of that country, "you can pick up gold by the pint."

"It comes in quarts in America," retorted the quick witted nephew of Uncle Sam.

The Value of Ridicule.

"A man," said Dr. Johnson, "should pass a part of his time with the laughers, by which means anything ridiculous or particular about him might be presented to his view and corrected."

There was nothing doing in police court yesterday morning.

A HINT FOR TRAMPERS.

Chamois Heels to Slip Over the Stockings.

Walking in the mountains seems to be more destructive to the stockings than any other form of exercise, even bicycling. The change of grades appears to bring special stress upon the heels and necessitates darning in holiday time, when darning is most obnoxious. Having had experience with this, we were delighted to discover at a drug store some chamois heels which could be slipped over the stockings when tramping and saved a great deal of wear upon them. These are not always to be found, but they can be easily made at home if some care is taken in cutting a pattern and carefully fitting it to the person who is to wear the heels. For the pattern cut a piece of paper five inches square, marking it at the top and bottom. Fold it across the middle, and on the fold make a cut an inch and a quarter deep from each edge. From the point thus reached cut a curve to the two lower corners. Fold the lower corners over on the outside so that they almost meet the upper corners. Fit this to the heel and when properly shaped cut out the chamois, stitching it smoothly and firmly in form and adding two elastic bands to reach over the ankle from the two sets of corners. There are such differences in the sizes of heels that the pattern must necessarily be somewhat modified for different ages, but if properly made and carefully worn these heels are very useful.—J. H. in Good Housekeeping.

FOR THE TABLE.

A Dainty Way of Serving Potatoes and Peas.

Boil about a pound of dry, floury potatoes. If at all inclined to be watery, it is better to bake them in their jackets or steam them. Beat them till quite smooth and light, season with pepper and a pinch of nutmeg, if liked, add an ounce of butter and the yolks of two eggs, and beat till these ingredients are well blended and smooth. When cool roll out, using just sufficient flour to make this possible, to the thickness of about one and one-half inches. Cut out into rounds the size of a tumbler, and with a smaller cutter remove a piece from the top of each, as though making patties. Egg and breadcrumb them very neatly, place in a frying basket and fry to a light brown. Fill the cavities with cooked peas nicely seasoned and tossed in butter and place the piece removed from the center on top of the peas to form a lid.

Drinking at Meals.

Most physicians today will tell you never to take any liquid, and least of all water, during meals. There are, however, two sides to the question.

Those with a tendency to gout or other diseases arising from excess of uric acid should avoid liquids until two hours, at least, after eating.

For those without such a tendency there is no harm in drinking a moderate amount at the end of the meal.

There is, therefore, sound reason back of the custom of keeping the coffee for the last course. Even when this prandial drinking is permissible, one should avoid excess. A little cold water held in the mouth is often just as refreshing as if gallons of the liquid had been consumed.

The great American fault—or one of them—is the consumption of enormous quantities of ice water, which is really a deadly beverage and not fit for civilized man to drink. I emphasize the "civilized," for no savage would do anything so stupid as to chill and paralyze the muscles of his stomach in the belief that he is cooling his skin.

The rule, then, is a little water if you are healthy and your stomach is normal, and that cold, and taken at the end of the meal. And thus will you avoid the countless ills to which most drinkers during meals are heirs.

Using the Blotter.

A woman was trying to lift a big blot of ink from a letter with a piece of blotting paper, with the usual result of making the blot bigger and uglier than it was at first. "Let me show you how to do that," said her friend. "I learned the trick in a stationer's shop in London last year. You just moisten the corner of the blotter first, to get it started, and then apply it to the ink spot. There! Isn't it wonderful how clean it takes it all up?"

For Sore Throats.

For an ordinary sore throat, with loss of voice or huskiness, dip a folded handkerchief in cold water. Encircle the neck with the wet handkerchief and cover it with several folds of old flannel. One night's application is usually sufficient to relieve slight cases.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these, running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 70 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

On to Willow Creek!

Recent discoveries at Willow Creek, in the Greenwater Copper region, have caused a rush of excited miners. The Baltic strike and other explorations of neighboring ground are unquestionably authentic. We have identically the same indications on our Providence group, located near the mouth of Willow Creek. Water is plentiful but transportation hitherto has been difficult. Now the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad has extended into Death Valley, and Willow Creek is attracting capital, and the town of that name contains a thousand souls.

THE GUGGENHEIM-GREENWATER COPPER COMPANY

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

Never in his life before had Dr. Holbrook been as much interested in any female who was sick as he was in Madeline, and determining to make his call on Mrs. Briggs as brief as possible, he alighted at her gate, and knocked impatiently at her door. He found her pretty sick, while both her children needed a prescription, and so long a time was he detained that his heart misgave him on his homeward route, lest Maddy should be gone, and with her the chance to remedy the wrong he might have done her.

Maddy was gone, and the wheel ruts of the square-boxed wagon were fresh before the door when he came back. Grandpa Markham had returned, and Madeline, who recognized old Sorrel's step, had gathered her shawl around her and gone sadly out to meet him. One look at her face was sufficient.

"You failed, Maddy?" the old man said, fixing about her feet the warm buffalo robe, for the night wind was blowing cold.

"Yes, grandpa, I failed."

They were out of the village and more than a mile on their way home before Madeline found voice to say so much, and they were nearer home by half a mile ere the old man answered back:

"And, Maddy, I failed too."

CHAPTER IV.

Mrs. Noah, the housekeeper at Aikenside, was slicing vegetable oysters for the nice little dish intended for her own supper, when the head of Sorrel came around the corner of the building, followed by the square-boxed wagon containing Grandpa Markham, who, bewildered by the beauty and spaciousness of the grounds, and wholly uncertain as to where he ought to stop, had driven over the smooth-graveled road around to the front kitchen door. Mrs. Noah's spacious domain, as sacred as Betsey Trotwood's patch of green.

"In the name of wonder, what codger is that? and what is he doing here?" was Mrs. Noah's exclamation, as she dropped the bit of salsify she was scraping, and hurrying to the door, called out: "I say, you, sir, what made you drive up here, when I've said over and over again that I wouldn't have wheels tearing up turf and gravel?"

"I—I beg your pardon. I lost my way, I guess, there are so many turnin's. I'm sorry, but a little rain will fetch it right," grandpa said, glancing ruefully at the ruts in the gravel and the marks on the turf.

"Mrs. Noah was not at heart an unkind woman, and something in the benignant expression of grandpa's face, or in the apologetic tone of his voice, mollified her somewhat, and without further comment she stood waiting for his next remark. It was a most unfortunate one, for though as free from weakness as most of her sex, Mrs. Noah was terribly sensitive as to her age, and the same census-taker would never venture twice within her precincts. Glancing at her dress, which was this leisure afternoon much smarter than usual, grandpa concluded she could not be a servant; and as she seemed to have a right to say where he should drive and where he should not, the meek old man concluded she was a near relation of Guy—mother, perhaps; but no, Guy's mother was dead, as grandpa well knew, for all Devonshire had heard of the young bride Agnes, who had married Guy's father for money and rank. To have been mistaken for Guy's mother would not have offended Mrs. Noah particularly; but how was she when she heard:

"I come on business with Squire Guy. Are you his gran'marm?"

"His gran'marm!" and Mrs. Noah bit off the last syllable spitefully. "Bless you, man, Squire Guy, as you call him, is twenty-five years old."

As Grandpa Markham was rather blind, he failed to see the point, but knew that in some way he had given offense.

"I beg your pardon, ma'am; I was sure you was some kin—maybe an a'nt."

No, she was not even that; but willing enough to let the old man believe her a lady of the Remington order, she did not explain that she was simply the housekeeper; she simply said:

"If it's Mr. Guy you want, I can tell you he is not at home, which will save your getting out."

"Not at home, and I've come so far to see him!" grandpa exclaimed, and in his voice there was so much genuine disappointment that Mrs. Noah rejoined, quite kindly:

"He's gone over to Devonshire with the young lady, his stepmother. Perhaps you might tell me your business; I know all Mr. Guy's affairs."

"If I might come in, ma'am," he answered, meekly, as through the open door he caught glimpses of a cheerful fire. "It's mighty chilly for such as me."

He did look cold and blue, Mrs. Noah thought, and she bade him come in, feeling a very little contempt for the old-fashioned camlet cloak in which his feet became entangled, and smiling inwardly at the shrunken, faded pantaloons, betokening poverty.

"As you know all Squire Guy's affairs," grandpa said, when he was seated before the fire, "maybe you could tell whether he would be likely to lend a stranger three hundred dollars, and that stranger me?"

Mrs. Noah stared at him aghast. Was he crazy, or did he mean to insult her master? Evidently neither. He seemed as sane as herself, while no one could associate an insult with him. He did not know anything. That was the solution of his audacity, and pityingly, as she would have addressed a half-idiot, Mrs. Noah made him understand how impossible it was for him to think her master would lend to a stranger like him.

"You say he's gone to Devonshire," grandpa said, softly, with a quiver on his lip when she had finished. "I wish I'd knew it; I left my granddarter there to be examined. Maddy, I'll must him going back, and can ask him."

"I tell you it won't be no use. Mr Guy has no three hundred dollars to throw away," was Mrs Noah's rather sharp rejoinder.

"Well, well, we won't quarrel about it," the old man replied, in his most conciliatory manner, as he turned his head away to hide the starting tear. Grandfather Markham's heart was very sore, and Mrs. Noah's harshness troubled him. He could not bear to think that she really was cross with him, besides that he wanted something to carry Maddy besides disappointment, so by way of testing Mrs Noah's amiability and pleasing Maddy, too, he said, as he arose: "I'm an old man, lady, old enough to be your father." Here Mrs. Noah's face grew brighter, and she listened attentively while he continued: "You won't take what I say amiss, I'm sure. I've a little girl at home, a grandchild, who has heard big stories of the fine things at Aikenside. She has a hankerin' after such vanities, and it would please her mightily to have me tell her what I saw up here, so maybe you wouldn't mind lettin' me go into that big room where the silk fixin's are. I'll take off my shoes, if you say so."

"Your shoes won't hurt an atom; come right along," Mrs. Noah replied, now in the best of moods, for, except her cup of green tea with raspberry jam and cream, she enjoyed nothing more than showing their handsome house.

Conducting him through the wide, marbled hall, she ushered him into the drawing-room, where for a time he stood perfectly bewildered. It was his first introduction to rosewood, velvet, and brocatelle, and it seemed to him as if he had suddenly been transported to fairyland.

"Maddy would like this—its her nature," he whispered, advancing a step or two, and setting down his feet as softly as if stepping on eggs.

Happening to lift his eyes before one of the long mirrors, he spied himself, wondering much what that "queer-looking chap" was doing there in the midst of so much elegance, and why Mrs. Noah did not turn him out! Then mentally asking forgiveness for this flash of pride, and determined to make amends, he bowed low to the figure in the glass, which bowed as low in return, but did not reply to the very good-natured remark: "How d'ye do—pretty well, to-day?"

There was a familiar look about the round cape of the camlet cloak, and Grandpa Markham's face turned crimson as the truth burst upon him.

"How 'shamed of me Maddy would be," he thought, glancing sidewise at

EQUILIBRIUM.

Try These Balancing Feats if Your Mamma Will Let You.

The accompanying illustration may lead you at first to think that it represents several feats that only a skillful juggler can perform, but when you have had an explanation of the apparently precarious positions in which the glasses are placed you will see that any one with steady nerves and a little patience may readily accomplish everything here pictured.

The first thing to do is to practice standing one glass upon another in such a way that the axis of the upper one shall be a prolongation of the axis of its support. Care should be taken that glasses as nearly alike as possible be used and that the table on which they are placed be perfectly level, for even a slight variation from this rule may make a failure of your experiment.

The second exercise consists in balancing the body and foot of one glass upon the rim of another, as shown in the middle figure of the cut. At the back part may be seen a way of doubling this experiment with hardly any additional risk.

Two glasses may also be balanced side by side in the mouth of a third. Their feet must not touch the body of the third glass. They are simply bedded on their support, and it is strange to see how in consequence of their exact juxtaposition neither of them shows any inclination to swerve or to tumble off.

It may be remarked that this latter feat is not so much an experiment in equilibrium as a new and curious arrangement to puzzle a late comer to the dinner table.

Thanks to the exactitude of the geometrical form of your glass, you may with a little practice succeed in making stranger superpositions still, and the pyramid shown on the right will seem to you after a little while as mere child's play.—Chicago News.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, but these symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve disease—nothing else.

It was the fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular specific Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that nerve and tonic to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle such lasting accomplishments were never to be.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We will and cheerfully recommend

A Dog and an Indian.

Recent experiments made in Germany have proved that a dog taken across the country on foot a distance of a hundred miles can find his way back over the highways. At a greater distance he appears to get all turned around. Many that wander away from home do not return at all, but generally that is because they find better masters.

Ten years ago experiments were made in the west on Indians. It was shown over and over again that an Indian could not be lost. He might be taken into a strange country blindfolded, but five minutes after he could see he would locate the points of the compass and head for home.

He can see no better at night than the white man, but will take a straight course on the darkest night and make no mistake. He has to have the instincts of an animal to live.

The Flying Fish.

The flying fish does not fly. It jumps out of the water, propelled by the most powerful tail in use in proportion to the size of the bearer. It jumps from the water only to escape from its enemies, among which are the bonito, the shark, the sperm whale and the dolphin. The last is the most active. The fins, which are called wings, guide the fish to some extent and enable it to make such extraordinary leaps. Some leaps have been estimated at eighty rods in length. The flying fish of the West Indies is from six to eight inches long. The largest are found in the Pacific and are sometimes eighteen inches long. It is said that flying fish have taken the fly and fight well when hooked. The West Indian flying fish is said to be better eating than a smelt, but the Pacific coast fish is not esteemed as food. The scientific name for the flying fish is exocaetus.

A Queer Experiment.

A man who is always hunting up unusual things suggests an experiment that boys and girls might find amusing. Here it is: Sing for twelve or fifteen seconds, with the usual pitch of the voice, part of any song you know. Then, having stopped your ears with your little fingers so as to exclude all external sounds, sing the same as before and note the sound of your voice. Now, as a third experiment, press the palms of your hands against your ears and sing as before. You will be astonished, perhaps, at the force and volume of the tones you hear.—Chicago News.

Before the Bar.

The terms "admitted to the bar" and "before the bar" are of English origin. The "bar" in question is the barrier or railing which separates the judge and the other officers of the court from the rest of the courtroom. In earlier days the parties to a suit presented themselves before this bar, accompanied by their counsel. A lawyer, after keeping the required number of terms at the inns of court and passing a satisfactory examination, was then entitled to appear before the bar on behalf of a client, or, in other words, he was "admitted to the bar." The English word "barrister" suggests the technical meaning of this word.—Scrap Book.

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Pat, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty side claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and with with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Many Doctors Failed

Dr. Hamilton Again Figures in a Case that Puzzled Other Physicians.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 3.—When the treatment of Mrs. Stanley, of 143 Argyle St., was first given it caused no small comment, and again establishes that a physician who understands his profession, none excel Dr. Hamilton.

"For years," says Mrs. Stanley, "I have suffered greatly from a peculiar [illegible] called the result from pleurisy and asthma. Doctors prescribed but failed to advise anything of real benefit. A friend urged me to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut and I bought five boxes. They gave me renewed strength and energy, toned my stomach, enriched my blood, and supplied just what my system needed. No medicine could have benefited more than Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and I believe every woman would be helped enormously by using these pills regularly. They did me more lasting good than all the prescriptions I took in five years."

No man or woman in poor health ever used Dr. Hamilton's Pills without benefit; the depressed, ailing and weak they uplift and strengthen as a trial always proves.

Dr. Young Wins Lipton Prize

Dr. T. W. H. Young has won the 5th prize out of some 50 prizes awarded in Sir Lipton Limerick competition. This contest was in the form of an incomplete rhyme, wherin the last line had to be supplied by those after the prize. In the doggrel finished by Dr. Young the line in the article opened up by noting that "We'll Challenge the Yankees again." The Mail and Empire of Tuesday gives an account of Dr. Young's winning this prize. We are informed that the doctor, with due professional antipathy, against newspaper notoriety sees his winning contribution in his son's name, both he and his son have the same christian name.

The saw was destroyed and some of the wicked teeth of this disintegrator of bygone trees flew in all directions, some of them entering right into the floor to a considerable depth.

ARTIFICIAL PEARLS.

What a Little Silver Fish Taught a French Beadmaker.

"I'll tell you," said a jeweler, "how the wonderfully perfect artificial pearl came to be invented.

"A rich French beadmaker, Moise Jaquin—he lived in the seventeenth century—found a pond in his garden covered one morning with a lovely silvery luster. Amazed, he called his gardener, who said it was nothing—some albetics had got crushed; that was all.

"Albetics were little silver fish, bleaks, the Leuciscus alburnus. The gardener explained that if you crushed them they always gave the water a pearly sheen like that. Jaquin put on his thinking cap.

"For six years he worked with beads and bleaks, wasting millions of both, but finally he achieved success. He learned how to extract the pearly luster from the bleaks' scales and to cover a glass bead with it.

"What he did—and his method is still used—was to scrape the scales from the fish, wash and rub them and save the water. The water, decanted, gave off a lustrous fluid of the thickness of oil, a veritable pearl paint, a magic fluid that imparts a lovely pearly sheen to everything it is applied to.

"It takes 1,000 bleaks to yield an ounce of this pearl paint."

CIRCUS RIDERS.

They Earn Good Salaries, but Their Careers Are Short.

A man horseback rider receives from $75 to $125 a week, and his career as a principal rider lasts about ten years. It is short not so much because these men get stiff and lose their agility as because they lose their nerve. Nearly all circus folk marry young, and with their added responsibilities comes a lively sense of danger which they ignored in younger days. A man rider who cannot turn a somersault on a horse cannot command more than $50 a week. A woman rider who can perform this feat gets from $150 to $200 a week if she is a finished rider.

This isn't much when all the disadvantages of the calling are taken into consideration, but it should be remembered that all the expenses are paid, including the care, feeding and of course the transportation of their horses. All they have to provide is their own clothing. For the men riders clothes do not constitute much of a factor, and the women nearly always make their own, except those provided by the management.

French Rags High Priced.

A collector of rags offered the manager of a large boarding house a certain price for a bag of worn-out linen.

"These rags are worth more than that," said the shrewd landlord. "I run several houses in this neighborhood, and all are occupied exclusively by French guests."

The dealer apparently considered that remark sufficiently explanatory. He cast a hasty glance upon the contents of the bag, then raised the price.

"And he could well afford to raise it, too," said the landlord. "Even at that rate he will make money off the things. French rags the world over bring a higher price than any other. The reason why? French people wear a better quality of linen and their cast-off garments are in demand by all manufacturers of high grade paper."

The Congregation Smiled.

Two country clergymen had agreed to exchange pulpits on a certain date. One of them made the following solemn announcement to his congregation on the Sabbath previous to the event:

"My dear brethren and sisters, I have the pleasure of stating that on next Sunday morning the Rev. Zachariah B. Day will preach for you. Let us now sing two verses of hymn No. 480, 'That Awful Day Will Surely Come.'"

And it took him some time to discover why the congregation smiled.

The First Boat.

At first when a man wanted to cross a deep stream he was compelled to swim across. But man at best is a poor swimmer, and it was not long before he invented a better method of traveling on water. A log drifting in a stream furnished the hint. By resting his body upon the log and pleasing with his hands and feet he found he could move along faster and easier. Thus the log was the first boat and the human arm was the first oar.—S. H. Forman in St. Nicholas.

Witty Women.

Women have more wit than humor. They are more sensitive than men. Their minds are nimbler. Their thoughts flash instantly to an intuitive conclusion; hence wit is far more natural to them. They have hardly the intellectual patience to create or enjoy the less obvious and more deliberate moods of humor.

A Failure.

"So you don't believe in the mind cure?"

"No."

"Did you ever try it?"

"Well, I once tried to convince my wife that she didn't really want a new gown."

Looks That Way.

"I wonder if Mars really is inhabited."

"Don't know, but if Saturn is, I'll bet the politicians own it."

"Think so?"

"Certainly; can't you see the rings?"

A concealed spark is more to be feared than an open fire.—Common Sense.

A Most Valuable Agent.

The glycerine employed in Dr. Pierce's medicines greatly enhances the medicinal properties which it extracts from native medicinal roots and holds in solution much better than alcohol would. It also possesses medicinal properties of its own, being a valuable demulcent, nutritive, antiseptic and antiferment. It adds greatly to the efficacy of the Black Cherry-bark, Bloodroot, Golden Seal root, Stone root and Queen's root, contained in "Golden Medical Discovery" in subduing chronic, or lingering coughs, bronchial, throat and lung affections, for all of which these agents are recommended by standard medical authorities.

In all cases where there is a wasting away of flesh, loss of appetite, with weak stomach, as in the early stages of consumption, there can be no doubt that glycerine acts as a valuable nutritive and aids the Golden Seal root, Stone root, Queen's root and Black Cherry-bark in promoting digestion and building up the flesh and strength, controlling the cough and bringing about a healthy condition of the whole system. Of course, it must not be expected to work miracles. It will not cure consumption except in its earlier stages. It will cure very severe, obstinate, hang-on chronic coughs, bronchial and throat troubles and chronic sore throat with hoarseness. In acute coughs it is not so effective. It is in the lingering hang-on coughs, or those of long standing, even when accompanied by bleeding from lungs, that it has performed its most marvelous cures.

Prof. Finley Ellingwood, M. D., of Bennett Med. College, Chicago, says of glycerine:

"In dyspepsia it serves an excellent purpose. Holding a fixed quantity of the peroxide of hydrogen in solution, it is one of the best manufactured products of the present time in its action upon enfeebled, disordered stomachs, especially if there is ulceration or catarrhal gastritis (catarrhal inflammation of stomach), it is a most efficient preparation. Glycerine will relieve many cases of pyrosis (heartburn) and excessive gastric (stomach) acidity."

"Golden Medical Discovery" enriches and purifies the blood curing blotches, pimples, eruptions, scrofulous swellings and old sores, or ulcers.

Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., for free booklet telling all about the native medicinal roots composing this wonderful medicine. There is no alcohol in it.

DUGALD ROSS IS FOUND--SAID HE WAS ROBBED OF $100,000

Located in Dover, England---Well Known and Wealthy Young Man from Streetsville, Ont. Located in Railway Station Shortly After Midnight

London, Oct. 4.—Dugald Ross, of Streetsville, Canada, who has been missing since September 24, was found in the waiting room of the railway station at Dover at an early hour yesterday morning. A small hand bag and the clothing he stood up in were his only available assets

POLICE FOUND HIM.

London, Oct. 4.—Despatches from Dover say that, as a result of the communication from the manager of the Burlington Hotel, Dover, an inspector of police went to the waiting room of the South Eastern Railway shortly after midnight, and there found Ross waiting to catch the train for London. Ross had been staying at the hotel under the name of Robinson.

HE TALKED FREELY.

On being challenged by the inspector, "Robinson" promptly admitted that he was Ross. After some conversation with the manager, Ross agreed to return to the hotel. Ross stated that his intention in leaving for London was "to get some money." He said he was not, as reported, a millionaire, nor had he ever made that statement. He had come over to Dover and assumed the name Robin son in order that he might have quietude. All the questions put to Ross were answered quite freely.

HAD BEEN SWINDLED.

The Canadian stated that he had gone into the city to cash a check but found that he could not get the money. He also alleged he had been swindled by a man, whom he had followed as far as Folkestone, but, on finding that the latter had left by boat, he decided to stay there. After remaining at the Metropole Hotel he had come on to Dover, where he arrived last Thursday.

ROBBED OF $100,000.

Yesterday afternoon's despatches from Dover say that Ross is very reticent concerning his recent movements. He stated to the police, however, that he was robbed of twenty thousand pounds in London by "swindlers."

Ross' Capital in 3 Yrs. Increased From $200 to $250,000

Streetsville, Oct. 4.—In a beautiful section of the country, a couple of miles from Streetsville, Ontario lies the farm which is described in the despatches as the property of Dugald Ross, "the young American millionaire." It is true that there is a fine farm of 150 acres, and it is also true that there is some good stock on it. But the people of the neighborhood call it John Ross' property, and John Ross is Dugald's father. As a matter of fact, the young man is a partner in the business, but he is no millionaire—and never was. That he has handled a lot of money is undoubted. His career goes to show that the importation of thoroughbred Clydesdales and Hackneys is a paying business when properly managed. How he got his quarter of a million in Kimberley shares is, however, a mystery. His father says that he started his horse buying three years ago with a couple of hundred dollars, and even with the best of luck in his and mining purchases, it is hardly conceivable that he could bob up serenely with $250,000 in three years.

AN AMBITIOUS YOUNG MAN.

Dugald Ross is only twenty-three years of age, and he was still in his teens when he brought over his first consignment of horses from the Old Country. He had the money for these before delivery, and from that time on his success has been phenomenal. The imported horses are costly, and naturally the profits are large. Six Clydesdales now in the stables at his father's farm are insured for $10,000, which gives some idea of their value. Last winter Mr. Ross had bad luck with a lot of horses he was taking west. These were burned and otherwise injured on the train, but even on this consignment he recovered the insurance.

The young man who has been attracting so much attention the last few days has always wanted to "look older." He is ambitious. Three pictures of himself which he sent home from the old country give an unmistakable impression of enterprise and business ability.

ANXIOUS TO MAKE MONEY.

Last winter he was sick, and had to undergo an operation. He had a trained nurse at his bedside, and insisted on paying all the expenses of his illness himself. While he was yet so weak that he could hardly write, he insisted on getting pen and ink and sending off letters in connection with North-West lands, which were another source of revenue to him. He said he had been sick too long, and that he must get about his business again.

The neighbors could hardly believe the news in the papers as to his having mining shares worth $250,000, however. His own father was astonished. The boy was born and raised on the homestead, and to the countryside he is just "Dug." Ross. Indeed he so signs himself. His friends cannot see where his revenue came from, though they now realize that he has shown considerable business acumen.

LOVED IN HIS MOTHER.

In the Streetsville vicinity he has been known as a young man of exemplary habits.

In fact he was "mother's boy." The brave little woman who has all along refused to be despondent over his disappearance, declared to the correspondent at the homestead yesterday morning that she has known more of his affairs than anyone. "Nobody but myself has any idea of how

Should Know of this Prescription

Also Valuable Advice How to Relieve Rheumatism

Cut this out and put it in some safe place for it is worth more than anything else in the world if you should have an attack of rheumatism, bladder trouble or any derangement of the kidneys whatever.

The prescription is simple and can be made by anyone at home. The ingredients can be had at any good prescription pharmacy and all that is necessary to do is to get well in a hurry.

Here it is: Fluid extract dandelion, one-half ounce; compound Kargon, one ounce; one pound syrup of sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime. A few doses is said to relieve almost any case of bladder trouble, frequent urination, pain and scalding, weakness and backache, pain about the kidneys, etc. It is now claimed to be the method of curing chronic rheumatism, because of its direct and positive action upon the eliminative tissues of the kidneys. It cleanses these sponge-like organs and gives them life and power to sift and strain the poisonous waste matter and uric acid from the blood relieving the worst forms of rheumatism and kidney and bladder troubles. The extract dandelion acts upon the stomach and liver and is used also extensively for relieving constipation and indigestion. Compound sarsaparilla cleans and enriches the blood.

As you, or any one of your family, especially the old folks, may be attacked at any time it would be wise to cut this out and save it.

A well-known local druggist is authority that this prescription is safe to use at any time.

Mix it yourself.

Police Court

At yesterdays' session of the Police Court, a poor old man, from the East Ward House of Providence, by name Philip O'Connor was found guilty of having imbibed, not wisely, but too well. It will be remembered that a day or two ago, Philip was found guilty of the same offence and was assessed the usual sum of $2. This is paid out of some $24 that the police had found on his person when searched after his arrest. Consequently at yesterdays Court when a further fine of $2 was imposed for the more recent drunk Philip's $24 or rather $22 was found to have gone the way that money goes when carried by a man also carrying a jag. In consequence Philip had to take the alternation in lieu of the fine so his post office address for the next ten days will be care of the County Jail.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

American View of Our Fast Growth

New York Sun Says Canada's Progress Has Been Economic

New York, Oct. 4.—The Sun says, "From time to time we have commented on Canada's economic progress, the growth of her foreign commerce and the development of her productive industries. In many ways her pace during the last ten years has been more rapid than that of the United States. Unless they shall occur some misadventure of which there is to-day neither origin nor hint her progress during the next ten years will far outstrip that of the last ten, but there is another and in its way an equally important fact in Canada's recent experience. It was emphasized in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's recent address before the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, when he said that 'To-day Canada has attained the full rank of Nation.' While this statement is perhaps not absolutely accurate, it is so far true that it is worthy of attention. The special and practically only limitation of Canada's full and complete nationality is the absence of the treaty making power.

"She is without final power in treaty relations with other countries, but she is negotiating treaties with other countries, and England virtually without question or dissent approves them. There is little question that England's refusal to confirm any treaty which Canada might wish to make, and which Canada deemed of importance to her interests and welfare would be followed by separation.

"If a reciprocity treaty were to be negotiated between this country and Canada it is doubtful if England would even be officially represented in the proceedings although her approval and signature would be necessary for their full completion.

"Canada is now too strong and self-reliant to need or ask for government or even guidance, by the mother country. Economically Canada has arrived. Politically she stands on the very border line of absolute independency, and perhaps it is only a question of a few years before she will cross the line."

Beaten to Death with Beer Bottle

Woman Found in New York Murdered by Her Companion

New York, Oct. 3.—So cautiously that fellow lodgers were not disturbed, a young woman was beaten to death in a bedroom [illegible] East 114th street, early yesterday. At noon, a man, who, with the woman, had occupied the room since last Friday, left the house and walked leisurely away. He did not return. The body was discovered soon afterward by the landlady. To the latter the two lodgers were known as Mr. and Mrs. George Boyle of Boston. Upon underwear left in the room by the man was stencilled "George V. Kramer."

The body is believed to be that of Nellie Quinn, who had been a nurse in the city hospital on Randall's Island. Last night George Kramer, employed in the Metropolitan Hospital on Blackwell's Island, was arrested in connection with the case. According to the police, Kramer admitted having been with the woman, but denied all knowledge of her death.

The couple appeared at the house late Friday. They brought only hand baggage, saying that their trunks would arrive later. The man went out frequently, but his companion remained much in her room. On Monday afternoon the woman left the house. Just outside the house she met the man, and the two returned to their room. The woman was not again seen alive. After Boyle left the house at noon yesterday, the landlady went to the room, and finding the door unlocked, looked in. On the bed lay the woman's body.

She had apparently been killed by a blow on the head, and the same weapon, a beer bottle, had been used to inflict on the disrobed body frightful bruises. The face had been pounded until the features were fairly obliterated. The treatment of the body generally was such as to suggest the work of a madman.

Cost of World Power.

London, Oct. 4.—Everything in this world has its price, that is everything which has a commercial or economic value attached to it. And these things may be obtained or held without paying the price.

Japan is finding this out. The Japanese have a contempt for many of the white man's beliefs. But to the law of compensation the Jap will have to bow, even though he should regard it as another of the white man's beliefs. Japan had an itching to become a world power, and that ambition has been gratified. Now she must pay the price. This she can no more escape than the ordinary citizen can escape the payment of taxes.

The report for the current year just issued by the Japanese department of finance shows that for the current year ¥353,000,000 have been added to the government expenditures. This, it is to be noted, is not for expenditures upon education or internal improvements, but for the army and navy, and the national debt which five years ago was less than $2.50 per capita is now $22.50.

Here is an increase of the tax burdens to be borne by the people of nine times their former weight, representing the difference between being an ordinary nation—just a plain, good liver—and a world power. Japan has the glory and withe prestige, whatever that may be worth, but she must pay the price in tax burdens to be borne by her people.

It is a whistle for which nations that buy it must pay too dear. And Japan is not the only country in that fix.

Lindsay Trustee Gets Epistle That Causes Much Sensation

Lindsay, Oct. 4.—A sensation was caused at a recent meeting of the Board of Education at which he resignation of Mr. J. C. Harstone, principal of the Lindsay Collegiate Institute was discussed and finally accepted.

Mr D. R Anderson, county court clerk and high court registrar, read an anonymous communication, threatening him with dismissal from the service of the Whitney Government if he voted for the acceptance of the resignation. Mr. Anderson declared he would not be intimidated. After a lively discussion the resignation was accepted.

Rebuke For Americans

London, Oct. 4.—Nothing further has yet transpired concerning the suggested new international yachting trophy, but inquiry in various yachting circles reveals the conviction that a new international contest will be arranged to take place in British waters in 1908 for yachts built under the new international rule, and that competitors are expected from America, France, Germany and Sweden.

The strongest approval is expressed on all sides at the course followed by Sir Thomas Lipton in the matter of his challenge for the America's Cup, and it is evident that any departure from the lines of the Royal Irish Yacht Club challenge would offend the sentiment of the British and Irish yachting worlds.

Long Speech Records

United States Senator William V. Allen of Nebraska, Populist, talked continuously in 1899 on the silver bill for twenty-three hours. He was on his feet constantly except for a few moments, when a point of "no quorum" was being enforced. This is a record for the United States.

The world record is held by Mr. De Cosmos, a member of the legislature of British Columbia, who spoke against a land bill for twenty-six hours without stopping for food or rest. He was scarcely given opportunity to take a drink of water.

Senator William A. Peffer talked in 1890 for twelve hours without food or rest.

Senator Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, spoke for nearly thirteen hours in 1901 in an effort to kill the river and harbor bill, which he succeeded in doing.

Lord Alverstone, as counsel for Great Britain in the Venezuelan arbitration matter, talked throughout the sessions of the commission for sixteen consecutive days. His address covered every phase of the British side of the case. Ferrozone

End of Telegraph Strike is Declared

Great Northern Telegraph Operators Drop Strike

Montreal, Oct. 4.—The Great Northern Western Telegraph Company operators who went on strike seven weeks ago, have declared the strike off; have admitted that they were ill-advised and have asked for reinstatement.

The men who went out belonged to the Toronto and Montreal offices and, as far as Toronto is concerned, they have taken concerted action and have passed a resolution declaring the strike off and asking for reinstatement.

In Montreal the strike incommoded the company for the time being, as men had to be secured to take charge of the keys. It took some time to get all the business through, but within two weeks or so it was announced that the company could handle any business given them. Some men did not go out and they, with the new operators, did a good deal of overtime work.

To-day the last of the strikers, who were still out of work, went back to their keys, and the strike became a thing of the past.

The Montreal and Toronto men went out on strike without a personal grievance, the strike being inaugurated on the ground that they were in sympathy with the strikers in the United States and they therefore refused to handle messages sent from the United States points through Canada by non-union men.

Why New Steamer was Called "Bessie Butler"

Tribute to Former Well Known Local Lumberman

One interesting feature connected with the recent launching of the fine new steel government steamer "Bessie Butler" is the significance of the very appropriate name by which she is known and the tribute paid to one of the best known lumbermen who formerly operated in an extensive scale on the Kawartha Lakes and their outlets. It may not be generally known that this steamer was called the "Bessie Butler in honor of the little daughter of the very efficient Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. There is however, a further significance in the choice of the new boat's name, as Mr. Tobias Butler, father of the Deputy Minister, as noted above, was well known in this district as an expert lumberman in the days when huge rafts of magnificent square timber were floated down from the back country to Quebec for shipment to England. Mr. Butler was then Manager of the Rathbun Company's lumbering operations in this district and to his capable management and wide spread knowledge of every detail of that business is due in no small way the present success of that well known firm.

The fact that the actual christening of the steamer was done by Superintendent McLennan's daughter, Miss Gertrude, was also a happy coincidence lending to an auspicious omen in the boat's future on these waters as the Bessie Butler will be under control of, and her future work supervised by that gentleman to whose capable management is due the present satisfactory condition and control of our magnificent local water supply. As a detailed description of the "Bessie Butler" has been given in a former issue, it is only necessary now to congratulate those in charge of the building operations and successful launching, on the result of their work which has added so fine a new steamer to our rapidly growing local fleet.

Municipalities Wish to Join City of Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 3.—If three suggested schemes of annexation to Toronto on the part of outside municipalities should go through, this city should have an additional population of nearly 70,000 or a total of over 300,000.

Toronto Junction claims over 11,000, Wychwood and Brarendale, 4,500; Dover Court, 300; and Deer Park, 1,200. All these suburban places wish to come into Toronto and deputations therefrom waited on the Board of Control yesterday with reference to the question. One of the terms put forward by the Toronto Junction deputation was to the effect that the city assume part of the consolidated debenture debt of $1,000,000. The board decided to send the question on to council without any recommendation.

WILL BE NO YORK LOAN DIVIDEND FOR PERHAPS A YEAR

Liquidator Says it Cannot be Paid Until the Court is Able to Give a Direction--Long Proceedings Yet to Be Gone Through

The liquidator of the York Loan has issued the following statement:

There has been some misunderstanding with reference to the present position of the York County Loan and Savings Company liquidation. The machinery for determining the rights of creditors was provided by the Dominion Act, and no change has taken place in the liquidation except that Mr. Happle has taken over the work of the referee at the point where Mr. McLean requested to be relieved.

Several statements have appeared that a dividend will be paid in the near future. As a matter of fact, it will be some considerable time before any dividend can be paid. The referee has given a series of appoints for the consideration of the matters to be adjusted, but it is absolutely impossible, owing to the nature of the issues to be tried, that the referee can give a final judgment for some months, and after his judgment is delivered the various parties have the right to appeal, first, to a single court judge, and from there to the other courts of appeal. It is, therefore, possible that it may be a year or longer before the court can instruct the liquidator to pay a dividend. In the meantime the assets are being realized upon to advantage, and as soon as the court is able to give the liquidator a direction a small dividend can be paid.

New Conditions in Selling Meat--Farmers Should Note New Act

Ottawa, Oct. 3.—The custom prevailing among farmers throughout Canada of slaughtering animals, particularly swine upon their own premises and selling the dressed carcases on the local market, is one which entails more or less loss to the producer. Before the advent of packing establishments, the domestic trade was supplied by the local butchers who were necessarily compelled to provide for future supplies, and, as a result, the local markets were created. Conditions have changed however, the local dealers no longer supplying the domestic trade, which has passed into the hands of the packing houses, which are now [illegible] centres for meats. Packers can afford to, and actually do, pay higher prices and sell at lower values than the local butchers for reasons which are obvious when one considers that profits are represented by the by products. The packers are adverse to buying dressed carcases as they represent smaller profits in by products; again dressed carcases are imperfectly handled by the farmer, the meat in many cases being bruised and unsightly, this, as well as improper chilling, being deterrent to good prices. Animals, especially logs, require scientific chilling, otherwise those parts which enter into the process of curing become sour and unfit for market. Packers prefer to buy their meats on the hoof, and for the reasons set forth above, are able to pay higher prices for the same.

AN IMPORTANT REGULATION

In view, however, of the large trade carried on in some parts of Canada, more particularly during the fall and winter, in dressed pork, as well as in other dressed meats, attention may be directed to one of the requirements of the regulations made under the new Meat Inspection Act, which is likely to have a considerable effect on the business referred to. The Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, having assumed the responsibility of inspecting and practically guaranteeing the healthfulness of all meats and meat products sent out by the packing houses must of necessity, protect itself by making sure that no diseased carcases are permitted to enter these establishments. The most effective way of preventing the entry of such diseased meat is, of course, the careful ante-mortem inspection provided for by the regulations, but in view of the large trade carried on in dressed carcases, and of the fact that both farmers and packers have been in the habit of handling meats in this way, the officials in charge of the enforcement of the Act have decided to admit to the establishments under inspection dressed carcases under such conditions as will enable them to judge with reasonable certainty as to whether the animal, prior to slaughter, was free from disease. Provision has therefore been made for the admission on inspection of dressed carcases with the head, heart, lungs and liver held by their natural attachments, such carcases to be inspected before entering the establishment, and if found fit for food, to be so marked and admitted for packing purposes, while if found to be diseased, to be condemned and tanked.

ON THE HOOF, IF POSSIBLE

This being the case it is incumbent upon every farmer bringing dressed hogs or other animals to market to remember that unless the carcases are dressed in accordance with the regulations mentioned above, namely, with these organs left in their proper positions, it will not be possible for the representatives of the packing houses to buy such carcases for use in any of the establishments coming under the operation of the Meat and Canned Goods Act.

The presence of the buyers or agents of these establishments on our local market has always been, at least to some extent, a safeguard against possible attempts by local combinations of butchers and others to depress the price of dressed meats, and it will be well for producers to bear in mind the new conditions, and when, for any reason, unable to market their stock on the hoof as they should undoubtedly do whenever possible, dress their hogs, as well as other animals in such a way as to meet the requirements of the new act.

Mr. J. McCabe Has Unpleasant Experience

We are pleased to be able to note that Mr. J. McCabe of the east ward, who on Wednesday at noon, was nearly knocked out of business by taking hold of a live wire, is recovering. It seems that Mr. McCabe whilst going east on the C.P.R. tracks that day encountered a wire extending from the C.P.R. station to a signal box in Ashburnham. This wire, in some unaccountable way had become broken and part of it fell across the trolley wire on George street and thereon, by the law regulating such matters took on the 500 odd volts of the wire it crossed. Mr. McCabe, whilst walking along met the wire which debarred his progress and seized it so as to make a passage for himself. He immediately received the whole 500 volts through his body and sustained several powerful shocks before it could let go of the wire. The force flung him down the embankment into the ditch, but he escaped uninjured. He felt as though some one had hit him three blows with a sledge hammer and could not release himself from the wire until he had received three shocks, the first one pulling him to his knees.

Had he seized the wire with both hands there is no doubt that he would have been instantly electrocuted.

Pillaged Alaskan Village

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 2.—A report has been made to United States consul Smith, of Vancouver, by Captain Munro, of the schooner Casco, of the alleged pillaging of the Alaskan village on Litak Bay, on southwest Kodiak Island, by the crew of a Japanese sailing schooner operating in Behring Sea this season. The Casco called at Litak Bay for water, and the Russian priests asked Captain Munro to inform the United States authorities of the outrage. The Japanese, [illegible] from the season, broke open houses, and took right and left. All manner of things were dragged from the houses.

Another report was received that the Japanese sealers had landed on Shelikoff Island, and killed cattle running on ranges there.

VERY PREVELENT IN YOUNG WOMEN

A Condition of "White-Bloodedness" is Fast Increasing.

It is always associated with langour and sensitiveness to cold. All the mucous surfaces, such as the gums, lips and eyelids, are blanched and waxy looking, the skin is pallid and colorless.

The pulse becomes rapid and feeble; there is also loss of appetite and enfeebled digestion, palpitation of the heart, breathless and tendency to faint. In extreme cases there is complete disappearance of the menses, dropsical swelling of the limbs.

Physicians know of no remedy so prompt in results as Ferrozone, which contains all the elements lacking in debilitated blood.

Ferrozone not only improves the present quality of the blood, but actually forms more blood—the rich, red kind that nourishes and feeds the organs that require assistance.

"About a year ago," writes Mrs. S. G. Stanhope, of Rothesay, "my daughter complained of feeling tired. She was very pale and listless, and kept losing strength until too weak to attend school.

"We read of a similar case, that of Miss Descent, Stirling, Ont., being cured by Ferrozone, and this induced us to get it for Elaine. It took three boxes of Ferrozone to make any decided improvement, but when six boxes were used my daughter was beginning to be her old self again. It didn't take much longer to make a complete cure. It has made a new girl of Elaine. She has gained ten pounds in weight and looks the picture of perfect health. She is stronger and enjoys the best of spirits."

Every growing girl and young woman can make herself strong and healthy with Ferrozone. Price 50c. per box, or six for $2.50, at all dealers.

IRELAND AND HOME RULE

A curious state of affairs prevails in Ireland at present, where the strength and progress of what is called the Sinn Fein movement is making trouble for Mr. Redmond and the "Nationalist" party. The Sinn Fein party are the extremists of the Home Rule cause—men whose open and avowed idea is complete defiance of British connection and ultimate separation from the empire. Holding that Mr. Redmond does not go far enough or fast enough in that direction, they are apparently aiming to break up the organization of which he is the head, in order to substitute a more extreme one.

So Mr. Redmond, having refused the local Home proposition of the Campbell-Bannerman government, and so having broken with the English Liberals, is between two unpleasantnesses—on the one side, English Liberal indifference, on the other side, the Sinn Fein assault.

Some people always suspect that all Home Rulers, though they may keep their complete thoughts to themselves, see as their ultimate goal a separation from England. Such suspicions include Mr. Redmond. The rebellion of the Sinn Fein men against Mr. Redmond ought to mitigate the apprehension. Meanwhile comes a remarkable declaration by one of Mr. Redmond's followers, Mr. Samuel Young, the Nationalist M. P. for East Cavan—remarkable, because if Mr. Redmond's party on the whole does not talk of separation from the British Empire, neither does it talk with enthusiasm of the empire. The following report of Mr. Young's remarks in a speech to his constituents is given in the London Times of Sept. 10:

"Mr. Young said they had too many organizations in Ireland. There was no necessity for Sinn Fein. It was impossible that they should shut themselves out from England. The Nationalist party had not been a failure. They had secured the best land laws in the world for the Irish tenants. He thought the Irish Council Bill had been offered in good faith and should have been accepted. He did not think Ireland could succeed by violence. They wanted a parliament in Ireland with delegated authority, to manage all purely Irish affairs which they had the ability and the disposition to undertake. They did not want so much separation as had been granted to Canada or the Australian colonies. They wanted the King of England to be their King, the Army and Navy to be their army and navy, and to contribute their full share of men to the forces; and they wanted the Excise and Customs to obtain alike over the three kingdoms. They wanted such a division of labor as might relieve the Imperial Chamber of much work it was now unfit to cope with. In place of disintegration they wanted consolidation. If these their desires were conceded, he could see no reason why they should not glory in British arms and in everything that pertained to the greatness of that Empire of which under happier auspices they should form a part."

Mr. Young is a Presbyterian who has for an Ulster constituency, so his views are likely enough to be more pronounced in the foregoing direction, and his utterances bolder, than those of many nationalists would or could be. Nevertheless, he has been a consistent supporter of the Home Rule party in Parliament for fifteen years, and must be accepted as indicating at least a part of the sentiment of that movement. He represents the Journal sentiment very accurately, anyway. The Journal has been a consistent advocate for twenty years of Home Rule for Ireland in the hope and belief that the success of the Home Rule movement would take the form which Mr. Young outlines, and in the conviction that nothing but Home Rule will ever make Ireland a willing and valuable partner in the Imperial scheme.

To Try Big License Fee

Collingwood Electors to Vote on a Bylaw to Make it $2500 a Year

Toronto, Oct. 3.—Hotelmen the province over will be interested in the proposal of the Collingwood town council to make the annual fee for liquor licenses in that place $2,500.

The council the other night decided place the by-law before the ratepayer in January. They count on the ratepayers endorsing it, which is not unlikely in view of the fact that last January the vote on the local option by-law went 794 for, to 656 against, the three-fifths restriction proving the saving clause for the hotelmen.

There are eight or nine licenses in Collingwood, and if the fee is raised to $2,500 it will result in nearly all of them quitting business. Half the fee goes to the government and half to the municipality.

The hotelmen's association of the province were represented by counsel at the Collingwood council meeting last week, but will take no action until the vote is taken on the by-law. Then, the result is unfavorable, a stiff fight will be made in the courts, for it is urged that other municipalities may adopt the same methods of substituting such a by-law for the ordinary processes of local option.

Indications are that perhaps 100 municipalities will vote on local option in January. A determined attempt is to be made to put a "dry belt" around the city, and determined campaigns in Toronto township, Etobicoke township, York township, East Toronto town and Scarboro township will be waged.

BLIND MAN'S BUFF.

Origin of This Favorite Sport of Childhood and Youth.

This favorite sport of childhood and youth is of French origin and very high antiquity, having been introduced into England in the train of the Norman conquerors. Its French name, "Colin Maillard," was that of a brave warrior, the memory of whose exploits still lives in the chronicles of the middle ages.

In the year 999 Liege reckoned among its valiant chiefs one Jean Colin. He acquired the name of Maillard from his chosen weapon being a mallet, wherewith in fight he used to crush his opponents. In one of the feuds which were of perpetual recurrence in those times he encountered the Count de Louvain in a pitched battle, and, so runs the story, in the first onset Colin Maillard lost both his eyes. He ordered his esquire to take him into the thickest of the fight, and, furiously brandishing his mallet, did such fearful execution that victory soon declared itself for him.

When Robert of France heard of these feats at arms he lavished favor and honors upon Colin, and so great was the fame of the exploit that it was commemorated in the pantomimic representations that formed part of the rude dramatic performances of the age. By degrees the children learned to act it for themselves, and it took the form of a familiar sport.

The blindfolded pursuer as, with bandaged eyes and extended hands, he gropes for a victim to pounce upon seems in some degree to repeat the action of Colin Maillard, the tradition of which is also traceable in the name, blind man's buff.

A REALISTIC ACT.

Amusing Story of Joseph Jefferson as Rip Van Winkle.

While he was playing Rip Van Winkle at Chicago Joseph Jefferson once went to the theater very much exhausted by a long day's fishing on the lake. As the curtain rose on the third act it disclosed the white haired Rip still deep in his twenty years' nap. Five, ten, twenty minutes passed, and he did not awaken. The audience began to get impatient and the prompter uneasy.

The great actor doubtless knew what he was about, but this was carrying the realistic business too far. The fact was that all this time Jefferson was really sleeping the sleep of the just, or, rather, of the fisherman who had sat eight hours in the sun. Finally the gallery became uproarious, and one of the "gods" wanted to know if there was going to be "nineteen years more of this snooze business!"

At this point Jefferson began to snore. This decided the prompter, who opened a small trap beneath the stage and began to prod Rip from below. The fagged comedian fumbled in his pocket for an imaginary railway ticket and muttered drowsily, "Going right through, 'ductor."

At this entirely new reading the audience was transfixed with amazement, when all at once Jefferson sat up with a loud shriek, evidently in agony. The exasperated prompter had jabbed him with a pin. Consciousness of the situation came to him, and the play went on after that with a rush.

Young Boy is Killed and Eaten by Dogs

Nome, Alaska, Oct. 2.—While going to meet his father, whom he had not seen for several days, thirteen-year-old Phillip Goodwin was torn to pieces by twelve of his father's fierce malamute dogs on Tuesday night, in the vicinity of Center Creek.

The dogs are of the largest species of animals used in this country, and when hungry have the fierceness of the wolf. Three of them were injured by the little fellow. The odor of the blood of the three injured dogs served to intensify the fierceness of the brutes who tore the little fellow to shreds, fared after killing him ate the flesh from his bones.

The boy made a fierce struggle when first attacked. He opened a large pocket knife and attempted to slay some of the beasts. Seeing this was impossible, the lad started to run, but had taken only two or three steps when he was thrown to the ground and pounced upon by the hungry animals. All of the dogs made their escape with the exception of one which was stabbed by the little fellow with his knife.

Getting an Opening.

A man had a story about a gun which he delivered himself of upon all occasions. At a dinner party one evening he writhed in his chair for over an hour, waiting for a chance to introduce his story, but no opportunity presented itself. Finally he slipped a coin into the hand of a waiter and whispered:

"When you leave the room again, slam the door."

The waiter slammed the door as directed, and the man sprang to his feet, with the exclamation:

"What's that noise—a gun?"

"Oh, no!" resumed his host. "It was only the door."

"Ah, I see! Well, speaking of guns reminds me of a little story," etc.—Liverpool Mercury.

Sun, Moon and Tides.

The sun and moon conjointly affect the oceans in obedience to the fact in nature known as the law of the attraction of gravity. It is the nature of things that the sun and moon shall pull at the earth's waters, and no further explanation can be given. When the sun and moon are pulling in line the tides are highest and when pulling against each other the lowest. The moon is so much nearer the earth than the sun that it does most of the pulling, notwithstanding its greatly inferior dimensions.

Love Is King.

Love is the great disciplinarian, the supreme harmonizer, the true peacemaker. It is the great balm for all that blights happiness or breeds discontent. It is a sovereign panacea for malice, revenge and all the brutal propensities. As cruelty melts before kindness, so the evil passions find their antidote in sweet charity and loving sympathy.

Easily Distinguished.

Clara—There should be a law passed compelling men to wear some distinct dress to denote whether they are married or not.

Maude—Oh, that isn't necessary.

Clara—Why not?

Maude—When a man is seen on the street in a last year's hat and baggy trousers, it is safe to bet that he's married.

No Way Out of It.

"We are worried about Julia. She is out of a sickbed to go to the matinee."

"How could she?"

"She had to go; she had a ticket."

When President Grant's only daughter, Nellie, afterward Mrs. Sartoris, was a miss of twelve years, she attended a private school in Washington. One afternoon, says the author of "The Olivia Letters," Nellie's lessons were not learned. The carriage came for her, but the teacher dismissed it with the request that it should return at the end of a half hour. The half hour came and glided away with the lesson still unlearned. The carriage came again and was dismissed. At the end of the second half hour the lesson was committed, and Miss Nellie was permitted to go. The next day at the usual hour the young lady arrived, accompanied by her mother. The teacher began to fear she had lost her most cherished pupil, but Mrs. Grant came to thank her for performing her duty.

"Teach her," said Mrs. Grant, "that she is only plain, simple Nellie Grant, subject to the same rules which govern all the scholars. This course will have my sincere approbation."

Reached the Limit.

A Providence girl, who has been married about six months, had wedding cards a short time ago from an old school friend who had given her a wedding present, which, of course, demanded one in return. Among her wedding presents the Providence girl had duplicates in the shape of two silver card trays, and in a spirit of economy she decided to give one of these to her friend. It was marked with her own initials, but it would be only a matter of a few minutes to have them removed and the proper monogram cut. She took it to the jeweler and explained what was to be done. He picked up the tray, looked at it closely and smiled.

"Madam," said he, "it will be impossible. I have already changed the initials on this same tray five times, and it has worn so thin that I cannot do it again without cutting through the bottom."

His Fears Realized.

For years the old country couple had looked forward to spending a holiday in London, and one day they found themselves in the very busiest part of the city. Together they stood watching the traffic, to which there seemed no end. They did not know how to cross the street.

"Whatever you do, Lisa, don't get separated from me," said the old man to his wife, "and, whatever you do, don't cross the road without me."

Then a kindly constable came along and, seeing the old woman hesitating, took her by the arm and commenced to pilot her to the opposite side.

"Dang my buttons," cried out the old man in alarm, "I allus told 'er that some one would take a fancy to 'er, but I didn't think any one 'ud 'ave the impudence to take 'er afore my very eyes!"—London Tit-Bits.

Had a Slow but Sure Gait.

There have been numerous disappointments in the outcome of some of the boys. We remember one boy in particular who runs the both of all ridiculous from the boys of his age, and he took it good naturedly. He seemed to have no particular friends and handed by himself. His clothes always looked funny, and he had that awful awkwardness over which the rest of us had much sport. No one ever thought that that plug would ever get anywhere or have anything. But today that plug is drawing a better salary than any two of the old gang. He has more money, more influence and more friends than any of the rest of us. The plug had a gait that was slow, but it was sure. He didn't appear to be a bit bright then, but he had a surface that took on a polish.

Yet He Didn't Need Them.

He had been calling on a young lady for many moons; but, being backward, his suit progressed slowly. Finally she decided it was up to her to start something, so the next time he called she pointed to the rose in his buttonhole and said:

"I'll give you a kiss for that rose." A large, open face blush meandered over his countenance, but the exchange was made. Then he grabbed his hat and started to leave the room.

"Why, where are you going?" she asked in surprise.

"To the 10-cent for some roses," he exclaimed.

Dangerous Ignorance.

If his son came to him and said, "I want you to show me on a piece of paper how this house is drained and why such traps are used," could the average citizen satisfy that son? Of course he could not. A few might be able to do so, but the average man is an ignorant person on all questions of hygiene.—G. H. R. Dobbs, M. D., in C. B. Fry's Magazine.

All Here.

"I'm told," said Miss Peppery, "that your bride is very pretty."

"Yes, indeed," replied Mr. Coz Rest. "Several of the guests at the ceremony were pleased to call it 'a peddling of beauty and brains.'"

"Really? She must be a remarkable woman to have beauty and brains."

He Listened to All.

Pennypoke listened to everything, and he offended no one by disputing anything. At the close of his life he was asked the secret of his success, and he replied that it was by observing two maxims, "Everybody may be right" and "Everything may be so."

The true strength of every human soul is to be dependent on as many rubber as it can discern and to be dependent upon by as many inferior as it [illegible].—Emerson.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2000 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 60 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

Mrs. Noah, who had witnessed the blunder, and was now looking from the window to hide her laughter.

Grandpa believed she did not see him, and comforted with that assurance, he began to remark upon the mirror, saying "it made it appear as if there was two of you," a remark which Mrs. Noah fully appreciated. He saw the silk chairs, slyly touching one to see if it did feel like the gored peach-blossom dress worn by his wife forty-two years ago that very spring. Then he tried one of them, examined the rare ornaments, and came near bowing again to the portrait of the first Mrs. Remington, so natural and lifelike it looked standing out from the canvas.

"This will last Maddy a week. I thank you, ma'am. You have added some considerable to the happiness of a young girl, who wouldn't disgrace even such a room as this," he said, as he passed into the hall.

Mrs. Noah received his thanks graciously, and led him to the yard, where Sorrel stood waiting for him.

"Odd, but clever as the day is long," was Mrs. Noah's comment, as, after seeing him safe out of her yard, she went back to her vegetable oysters boiling on the stove.

Driving at a brisk trot through the grounds, Sorrel was soon out upon the highway; and with spirits exhilarated by thoughts of going home, he kept up the trot until, turning a sudden corner, his master saw the carriage from Aikenside approaching at a rapid rate. The driver, Paul, saw him too, but scorning to give half the road to such as Sorrel and the square-boxed wagon, he kept steadily on, while Grandpa Markham, determined to speak with Guy, reined his horse a little nearer, raising his hand in token that the negro should stop. As a natural consequence, the wheels of the two vehicles became interlocked, and as the powerful grays were more than a match for Sorrel, the front wheel of Grandpa Markham's wagon was wrenched off, and the old man precipitated to the ground; which, fortunately for him, was in that locality covered with sand banks, so that he was only stunned for an instant, and thus failed to hear the insolent negro's remark: "Served you right, old cove; might of turned out for gentlemen." Neither did he see the sudden flashing of Guy Remington's eye, as, leaping from his carriage, he seized the astonished African by the collar, and, hurling him from the box, demanded what he meant by serving an old man so shameful a trick and then insulting him.

All apology and regret, the cringing driver tried to make some excuse, but Guy stopped him short, telling him to see how much the wagon was damaged, while he ran to the old man, who had recovered from the first shock and was trying to extricate himself from the folds of his camlet cloak. Nearby was a blacksmith's shop, and thither Guy ordered his driver to take the broken-down wagon with a view to getting it repaired.

"Tell him I want it done at once," he said, authoritatively, as if he well knew his name carried weight with it, then, turning to grandpa, he asked again if he were hurt.

"No, not specially—jolted my old bones some. You are very kind, sir," grandpa replied, brushing the dust from his pantaloons and then involuntarily grasping Guy's arm for support, as his weak knees began to tremble from the effects of excitement and fright.

"That darky shall rue this job," Guy said, savagely, as he gazed pityingly upon the shaky old creature beside him. "I'll discharge him to-morrow."

"No, young man. Don't be rash. He'll never do't again; and sprigs like him think they've a right to make fun of old codgers like me," was grandpa's meek expostulation.

"Do, pray, Guy, how long must we wait here?" Agnes asked, impatiently, leaning back in the carriage and partially drawing her veil over her face as she glanced at Grandpa Markham, but a look from Guy silenced her; and turning again to grandpa, he asked:

"What did you say? You have been to Aikenside to see me?"

"Yes, and I was sorry to miss you. I—I—it makes me feel awkward to tell you, but I wanted to borrow some money, and I didn't know nobody as likely to have it as you. That woman up to your house said she knowed you wouldn't let me have it, 'cause you hadn't it to spare. Mebby you haven't," and grandpa waited anxiously for Guy's reply.

Now, Mrs. Noah had a singular influence over her young master, who was in the habit of consulting her with regard to his affairs, and nothing could have been more unpropitious to the success of grandpa's suit than the knowing she disapproved. Beside this, Guy had only the previous week lost a small amount loaned under similar circumstances. Standing silent for a moment, while he buried and reburied his shining patent leather boots in the hills of sand, he said at last: "Candidly, sir, I don't believe I can accommodate you. I am about to make repairs at Aikenside, and have partially promised to loan money on good security to a Mr. Silas Slocum, who, 'if things work right,' as he expressed it, intends building a mill on some property which has come, or is coming, into his hands."

"That's mine—that's mine, my homestead," gasped grandpa, turning white almost as his hair blowing in the April wind. "There's a stream of water on it, and he says if he forecloses and gets it he shall build a mill, and tear our old house down."

Guy was in a dilemma. He had not asked how much Mr. Markham wanted, and as the latter had not told him, he naturally concluded it a much larger sum than it really was, and did not care just then to lend it.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he said, after a little. "I'll drop Slocum a note to-night saying I've changed my mind, and shall not let him have the money. Perhaps, then, he won't be so anxious to foreclose, and will give you time to look among your friends."

Guy laid a little emphasis on that last word, and looking up quickly, grandpa was about to say: "I'm not so much a stranger as you think—I knew your father well," but he checked himself with the thought: "No, that will be too much like begging pay for a deed of mercy done years ago. So Guy never suspected that the old man before him had once laid his arm under a debt of gratitude. The more he reflected the less inclined he was to lend the money, and as grandpa was too timid to urge his needs, the result was that when it last the wheel was replaced, and Sorrel again trotting on toward Devonshire, he drew after him a sad, heavy heart and not once until the village was reached did he hear the cheery chuckle with which his kind master was wont to encourage him.

"Poor Maddy! I dread tellin' her the most, she was so sure," grandpa whispered, as he stopped before the office door, where Maddy waited for him.

But Maddy's disappointment was keener than his own, and so after the sorrowful words, "and I failed, too," he bent himself to comfort the poor child, who, leaning her throbbing head against his shoulder, sobbed bitterly, as in the soft spring twilight they drove back to the low red cottage where grandma waited for them

CHAPTER V.

It was Farmer Green's new bagev and Farmer Green's bay colt which, three days later than this, stopped before Dr. Holbrook's office. Not the square-boxed wagon, with old Sorrel attached; the farmer was standing quietly in the chip-yard behind the low red house, while the latter, with his nose over the barnyard fence, neighed occasionally, as if he missed the little hands which had daily fed him the oatmeal he liked so much, and which now lay hot and parched and helpless upon the white counterpane Grandma Markham had spun and woven herself. Maddy might have been just as sick as she was if the examination had never occurred, but it was natural for those who loved her to impute it all to the effects of excitement and cruel disappointment, so there was something like indignation mingling with the sorrow gnawing at the hearts of the old couple as they watched by their fever-stricken darling. Farmer Green, too, shared the feeling, and numerous at first were his mental animadversions against that "prig of a Holbrook." But when Maddy grew so bad as not to know him or his wife, he laid aside his prejudices, and suggested to Grandpa Markham that Dr. Holbrook be sent for.

(To be continued)

Stomach troubles, Heart and Kidney ailments can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the Stomach, etc. Sold by all dealers.

CANADA A HOAX.

Dissatisfied Immigrant Relates His Experiences Out West.

A resident of Huntingdonshire who came to Canada intending to settle, but returned to the Old Land dissatisfied, thus describes the Dominion. The country, he says, is "a hoax," and civilized people cannot live in it, at all events with comfort. Our friend relates his sad experiences. He traveled by colonist train as far west as Calgary, and found the journey long. The train proceeded by night as well as by day, and the sleeping accommodation in the cars was not first-class, owing to the crowd and the absence of pillows and mattresses. Food was purchased at way stations, and was dear. Fivepence for an apple, two-pence half-penny for an orange, and the same price for a box of matches.

At Calgary everything was wrong. There was no city employment to be had, and for laboring work elsewhere the pay offered was but $18 a month, with all found. The homesteads are terrible places. The settler occupies a shack, a rough wooden structure, and his furniture is rude and primitive. He lives on plain food, and often goes for days without a shave. In fact he is a worn-out and listless looking fellow, who has perforce to revert to a condition of life akin to that of the savage. "I tell you," adds the critic of Canada, "there is not one man in a hundred who, like myself, goes out in entire ignorance of Canadian farming and gets on. He may tell you he does, in his letters, but that is due to his British pride."

Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys, surely point to weak kidney Nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, find their weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen them. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is futile. It is a waste of time, and of money as well.

If your back aches or is weak, if the urine scalds, or is dark and strong, if you have symptoms of Brights or other distressing or dangerous kidney disease, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative a month—Tablets or Liquid—and see what it can and will do for you. Druggist recommend and sell

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTHWEST HOMESTEAD REGULATIONS

ANY even numbered section of Dominion Lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, excepting 8 and 26, not reserved, may be homesteaded by any person who is the sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years of age, to the extent of one-quarter section of 160 acres, more or less.

Entry must be made personally at the local land office for the district in which the land is situate. Entry by proxy may, however, be made on certain conditions, by the father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of an intending homesteader.

The homesteader is required to perform the homestead conditions under one of the following plans:—

(1) At least six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each year for three years.

(2) If the father (or mother, if the father is deceased) of the homesteader resides upon a farm in the vicinity of the land entered for, the requirements as to residence may be satisfied by such person residing with the father or mother.

(3) If the settler has his permanent residence upon farming land owned by him in the vicinity of his homestead, the requirements as to residence may be satisfied by residence upon the said land.

Six months' notice in writing should be given to the Commissioner of Dominion Lands at Ottawa of intention to apply for patent.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

N.B.—Unauthorized publication of this advertisement will not be paid for.

There is a disposition on the part of friends of Canada in England to attack this dissatisfied visitor, who returned by the next ship. But this attitude is scarcely fair. The fact is that wrong man went to the wrong place. We are not all built on the same plans, and persons who are educated for city life are not likely to find happiness on the homestead in its pioneer days. What this writer proves is that there must be care in the selection of settlers. Instead of inducing city people, or persons brought up without any knowledge of agriculture, to emigrate, the Government must bend its efforts to the introduction of farmers or farm laborers with a little money to pull them through the preliminary difficulties. To such, life in a shack is no drawback, while the accompanying hardships, seeing that they point to something good in the future, are not matters of serious complaint.

All pioneer work is accompanied by drawbacks of the kind referred to, but these can be avoided if the settler has sufficient money with which to begin operations in better style. If the money is not at hand, it may be saved by "roughing it" for a few years. There can be no doubt that the newly-arrived western settler, if not well provided with means, has to put up with many things that are irksome. But his lot after all is smooth compared to that of the pioneer in older Canada who had to clear his land of trees and stumps before he could plant his corn. That the position of the settler calls for patience under difficulties, and for a readiness to bear hardships, there can be no question, but these qualities, thus invested, bear good fruit, as the many successes achieved on the prairies abundantly prove.

Round-Up Wild Horses.

Ranchers and prospectors along the boundary have gone into the hills of Southern British Columbia to round-up several bands of wild horses which the Legislative Assembly of the province have branded as pirates, authorising any one to shoot or capture them at stated periods of the year, after notifying horse owners so that tame animals may be claimed. Range riders say there are more than 2,000 wild animals in the bands.

The nucleus of the herd was formed in the fifties, veteran horsemen say, when explorers and prospectors rode on horseback from eastern to southern States. Many pioneers perished in the search for gold, but their horses survived.

When the gold fever was at its height in the Caribou district in the sixties many horses were brought in from the south for pack and saddle purposes, and as there were no roads it was the easiest thing for these animals to leave the trail and join those enjoying the freedom of the wilds.

The horses seen in the hills along the border little resemble the stock from which they sprang. They are long-haired, savage creatures, and show speed that would cause a sensation on a race course. They weigh not more than seven hundred pounds, all bone, muscle and sinew.

The ranchers have declared war against the pirates as a means of protecting their own animals which are frequently lured into the hills.

Shooting In "The Rockies."

I was shooting goats in the Rocky Mountains, and came very near indeed to death. The biggest of those I had shot was only badly wounded. I ran forward to despatch him, forgetting where I was. He struggled on, poor beast, and I, anxious to end his sufferings, never marked where I was going till I saw the goat vanish, and felt myself slipping slowly and steadily after him down a steep slope which ended abruptly on the edge of a precipice.

With desperation I dug my heels and my rifle into the snow, staying my progress, but only for a moment. Then I realized, with sickening conviction, that the shale beneath the snow was slipping, and that I must slip with it into the gulf below.

I lay perfectly still, dumb with horror, and I well remember shutting my eyes for the inevitable plunge.

And then, on the very ragged edge of eternity, I came to a blessed full stop. I do not remember how I crawled back to life and sound ground, but I was dripping with perspiration, as if I had just come out of the hottest room in a Turkish bath.

Next day the wounded goat was found, stone dead, some 3,000 feet below the spot where he had disappeared.—Horace Annesley Vachell, in The Windsor Magazine.

This company owns 4 claim (80 acres) of some of the best proven mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zion group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim, 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their productive of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed on same as soon as possible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Dr. Hamilton Speaks on Curing Pimples

Gives Common Sense Advice That Every Person can Employ at Home.

"I believe all skin diseases such as pimples and eruptions originate through the failure of the eliminating organs to pass certain poisonous wastes from the body.

"There is at all times a large accumulation of fuel matter in the system, which, if not destroyed, gets into the blood. Germs and disease producing matter are thus circulated through the body. Ultimately they force their way through the pores of the skin, produce pimples, swelling, red blotches and often eruptions horrible to look upon.

"I usually found the primary cause to be with the kidneys and bowels,—these organs are too slow. My Pills of Mandrake and Butternut contain very active vegetable extracts that act on these organs instantly. They give strength, tone and vigor to the eliminating organs that positively ensures a clean healthy body."

A course of Dr. Hamilton's Pills puts the system in perfect order, they cleanse the system inside as soap and water does outside, they remove all taints and poisons that block the avenues of health and life, make the skin smooth, restore roses to the cheeks and that brightness to the eye that denotes sound health. Because Mild, Safe, Efficient, anyone can use Dr. Hamilton's Pills with perfect results.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.. Testimonials free. Sold by Druggists. Price 75c per bottle.

Trial Catarrh treatments are being mailed out free, on request, by Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this scientific prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy.

Yesterday at noon Messrs Rutherford Bros., began making an extensive addition to that well known local hotel, the White House. These improvements include an extension to the rear for 24 feet to the south by some 26 feet to the east and west. This will give a larger sitting room at the front as well as providing ample room for an up-to-date and splendidly equipped lavatory.

Mr. Reid Munro in Good Sit

A high honor has been paid to a Peterborough literateur, Mr. Reid Munro, who has been awarded the responsible position of demonstrator in the School of Practical Science in Toronto. This gentleman is perhaps, or rather probably, the youngest man to get so responsible a literary position in the history of Canada. Even though this be an historical appointment it is fully justified by the merits and accomplishments of the man gaining the place.

Narrow Escape from Injury

Messrs Duffus Bros., were employed filling a corn silo for Mr. Wm. Shaw, in Otonabee, the roller plate broke and dropped down to the knives, causing it to break into pieces. The cover was hurled sixty feet from the silo and a piece of the knife just passed one of the men and lodged in an apple tree some 100 feet away. Mr. Duffus was very fortunate to escape with a few slight bruises.

Stand in with Assessors

The farmers of Eastern Ontario, according to the alleged statements of Chief Dairy Instructor Publow, will receive $2,000,000 less this year for their cheese than paid last season. This may be correct, Still if those losing this money want to encounter real up-to-date extravagant living let them buy property in Peterborough and get on the wrong side of the tax assessors. Their trials and tribulations will seem nothing by comparision otherwise.

Improvements on Snowden House

Mr. D. Fraser, the new proprietor of the Snowden House is not letting the grass grow under his feet, as he has concluded arrangements with the Messrs Rutherford Bros., to make extensive improvements to this old time popular hotel. The improvements include, enlarging the office by taking in part of the space formerly used in the old bar (now removed to the basement). This old portion of the house will otherwise be used for commercial rooms. Messrs Rutherford Bros. will also make other changes to the hotel. It might be noted that a gentleman from London, Ont., yesterday, noted to the Times that the new proprietor of the Snowden House is one of the best known hotelmen among the commercial men of Canada.

Dugald Ross Found

much money he has handled," she said. "I know his affairs, but I do not care to talk about them. He was not communicative himself, and he certainly would not have talked foolishly about his wealth in England. He was always very carefully about money. Indeed, the first that he got he sent home to us by check. He certainly is not the kind of a man to carry large sums around in his pocket."

THOSE KIMBERLEY SHARES.

His mother knew something of his South African transactions. She does not say how much. He wrote home that he expected to sell his stock, and the last postcard received from him, dated September 19, and stamped at London, at two a.m. next day, said that he would leave for home on the North German Lloyd line "next" (last) week. This was a picture post card of the Scotch singer Harry Lauder, with whom he has been very friendly for the past couple of years.

An aunt of Dugald arrived at Streetsville yesterday. She says that she wrote to her nephew from Glasgow, telling him to write to her at the general delivery. The Ross family had just about decided that Dugald was trying to locate his aunt in the old country when the news came this morning that he had been found at Dover.

BOUGHT MOTOR FOR AMERICAN.

Mrs. Ross knows all about her son's purchase of a fast automobile, and confirms the report that it was got for a wealthy New Yorker. Her boy had mentioned in several of his letters that he was in search of one which would do 100 miles an hour, and finally wrote that he was to try the one which he afterwards bought. He was fond of autos himself, and fond of horses, "but not fast horses," the family say. "He simply liked a good driver."

AFFAIR IS STILL A MYSTERY.

With the young man's good habits, business ability, Scotch caution, and love of home to be reckoned with the story of his being swindled seems to need an explanation. The acquiring of even $100,000 in three years is another thing which does not by any means help to clear up the situation. If a young lad from the country could do this, he should have been anything but an easy prey for Londoners. He was assuredly well enough off to have a private secretary. His mother knew of this man and of his visit to Africa to examine the mines for her son's information. She also confirms the story of his intention to buy a St. George street residence here for $23,000. His sister was to have kept house for him. As he unquestionably had a large amount of money the swindlers who he says took his all from him assuredly were well repaid for their trouble.

Left Family and Married Young Girl

Owen Sound, Oct. 3.—A warrant is in the hands of the police for the arrest of Thomas A. Richardson, of this town, to answer a charge of bigamy. Richardson, it is alleged, is a married man, having a wife and three children living on Union street hill, and on Sept. 2nd last, under the name of Jas. D. Wilson, he was married by the Rev. Mr. Franks, of the Methodist church, Brooke, to Miss Margaret Weir, second daughter of Mr. Adam Weir. He left his wife with only $10 the night of the marriage.

It is said that the defendant met Miss Weir, who is only 19 years old, at the home of H. McKenzie, St. Vincent street. He passed himself off as Jas. D. Wilson, and said he was a locomotive engineer on the C.P.R. He frequently told the girl and her people of relatives of the name of Richardson, residing on the East Hill, referring to himself, with whom he was very friendly.

EXPOSED DOUBLE LIFE.

All this time he was employed as foreman at Findlay's mill—and not at the C.P.R. He explained his spasmodic visits by the reason of the irregular arrivals and departures of his trains. The marriage was bitterly opposed by the girl's friends, but on the evening of Sept. 2nd the marriage ceremony was performed. The couple stayed at one of the local hotels over night and left on the 5.30 train over the Grand Trunk the next morning. Richardson said he was going to live in Lindsay.

Last Sunday, as nothing had been heard of the couple, enquiries were made at the home of the alleged relatives, and the wife identified a portrait of "Wilson" as her husband. Later, Mr. Weir located the couple in London by telegraphing to friends there. Richardson, who is 35 years of age, came from Flora a year ago.

Hastings "Masher" Punished

A Hastings despatch of yesterday says: A young Hastings "masher" who has been annoying the ladies of the town with his undesirable attentions during the past few months, was taken in hand the other night by an athletic young fellow, and when he got through with the "masher" the latter was hardly in a presentable condition. It is probable, however, that the lesson intended to be taught was impressed upon him so forcible that he will not forget it.

Bad Symptoms.

The woman who has periodical headaches, backache, sees imaginary dark spots or specks floating or dancing before her eyes, has gnawing distress or heavy full feeling in stomach, faint spells, dragging-down feeling in lower abdominal or pelvic region, easily startled or excited, irregular or painful periods, with or without pelvic catarrh, is suffering from weaknesses and derangements that should have early attention. Not all of above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time.

Neglected or badly treated and such cases often run into maladies which demand the surgeon's knife if they do not result fatally.

No medicine extant has such a long and numerous record of cures in such cases as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. No medicine has such a strong indorsement of each of its several ingredients—worth more than any number of ordinary non-professional testimonials. The very best ingredients known to medical science for the cure of woman's peculiar ailments enter into its composition. No alcohol, harmful, or habit-forming drug is to be found in the list of its ingredients printed on each bottle-wrapper and attested under oath.

In any condition of the female system, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can do only good—never harm. Its whole effect is to strengthen, invigorate and regulate the whole female system and especially the pelvic organs. When these are deranged in function or affected by disease, the stomach and other organs of digestion become sympathetically deranged, the nerves are weakened, and a long list of bad, unpleasant symptoms follow. Too much must not be expected of this "Favorite Prescription." It will not perform miracles; will not cure tumors—no medicine will. It will often prevent them, if taken in time, and thus the operating table and the surgeon's knife may be avoided.

Women suffering from diseases of long standing, are invited to consult Doctor Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser (1000 pages) is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps for paper-covered, or 50 stamps for cloth-bound copy. Address as above.

Combined Revolver and Rifle

Mr. M. C. Tooley, proprietor of the Queens Hotel, yesterday showed a representative of the Times, a combined revolver and rifle that is possibly unique in the array of local armaments. The weapon is to the casual observer simply an ordinary walnut wood gun stock. However by pressing the right spring a long barrelled revolver is brought out of the gun stock. By a simple movement this stock mentioned, may be attached to the revolver and a rifle used to aim and shoot from the shoulder. The Rifle—Revolver takes a slug containing ten cartridges, which are dropped into place in front of the hammer and by ten motions of the trigger finger as many shots may be fired in ten seconds. The barrel of the revolver is about the length of that of an old fashioned Colts revolver and is rifle-ly "rifled." The gun in question is a Mauser and is one of the most up-to-date weapons extant.

A "WHITE CANADA" IS NOW THE CRY OF VANCOUVER

Every White Man Wears a Ribbon Bearing This Slogan in B. C. City--5,000 Japs, Insolent, Aggressive, and Prosperous, In the City

An interesting article relative to the Vancouver riots against the Japanese and other Orientals appears in the current Harper's Weekly. It is written by R. Brown, city editor of the Vancouver Province. The situation is briefly described in graphic language as follows:

"Canada, unlike the United States, is hopelessly divided against herself on the Oriental question. Vancouver, rioter and spokesman for the Pacific coast, represents one extreme view; the Federal government at Ottawa, with command of immigration affairs and a wholesome respect for Britain's imperial policy, the opposite view. For Vancouver, let everyone know, with one-seventh of her population yellow, cares not a fig for the fact that Britain and Japan are allies in the far east. If Vancouver had her choice about it England would have no friends at all east of the Suez Canal. It is a far cry for a city of any land to carry her troubles halt-way around the world and back again, but Vancouver has had a riot, and, if you are to believe popular sentiment, fears not who knows about it.

"'White Canada!' is now the city's slogan. A gay ribbon, carrying these words, flutters in everybody's button-hole. The labor unions have taken it up, and a month's notice has been given to every employer of Chinese and Japanese cooks and waiters in the city that all must be replaced by white labor, which will be furnished by the union.

"The civic authorities are indirectly supporting the labor people. Three days after the riot nearly a thousand Hindus arrived by the steamer Monteagle. The mayor wired to Premier Sir Wilfrid Laurier pointedly asking that the government drill hall be granted to house them at the government's expense, as Vancouver had no room for them. The premier did not grant the request, and the Hindus are now living in tents or the open air.

"The unsophisticated Hindu—dirty and gaunt and with a roll of cagan dry goods wrapped around his head, but still a British subject—is regarded with complacency alongside the Japanese. Five thousand of the latter—insolent and aggressive—live and trade and prosper in Vancouver. They are in every business, from brokerage to sawmilling and fishing and tailoring. Everywhere they compete in a finished style with every white man. A Chinaman's word is in business is as good as the money in the national bank, but the Japanese is a slippery individual, who drives a hard bargain and never pays his debts if he can avoid it. In a few years he will be demanding the right to vote, and will insist on a share in the civic and provincial administration. But he does not assimilate and never will. His sons and daughters will never be Canadians. They will always, in reality, owe allegiance to the Mikado."

Peterboro Man in Ireland

Mr. James E. Harris Extols the Beauties of Old Ireland.

The following letter was received by Mr. R. J. Kidd of this city, from Mr. James E. Harris, formerly of Peterboro who is now on a visit to Ireland:

"We have had a most enjoyable trip, but I will be glad to be back in God's country again. Europe is all right for sight-seeing, but I wouldn't care to live over there all the time. The people are different and the customs are different from what we are used to in Canada, and as I'm not built like some of the 'geezers' who have been settled for life in Europe this country is good enough for me.

"We left New York July 11, and landed in Queenstown after a voyage of eight days. When I bought my tickets I told the man I wanted to go on a slow boat. Something went wrong with the tide just as the ship got squared around and we lay off the Jersey shore for twelve hours. During that time I had a good chance to size up the statute of liberty that rises out of the sea. I was saying to a friend this morning that we saw a whole lot of that kind of stuff on the other side, but nothing in Europe looked as good to me as the little lady who stands there in the harbor holding a torch in her mitt.

ALL OF IRELAND SEEN

"The trip, you know, was made for the purpose of touring Ireland in an automobile. All I can say is that we saw the Emerald Isle, and saw it good and plenty.

"On landing in Queenstown we went by jaunting car to Cork, where we stayed the first night. The next day we visited the Lakes of Killarney, then went by train to Dublin. In all my travels over Europe there was no spot in the road that made the hit with me as did Killarney. I don't say this to stand in with the Kerry people who live in Peterboro, but because I really am in love with the place.

"The Vale of Avoca is a fine bit of scenery, and the Giant's Causeway is a sight never to be forgotten, but the Lakes of Killarney have got everything backed off the board.

"I drove an automobile into every nook and corner of the island, and I promise you that nothing was sidestepped. In some of the smaller towns, away up north in the County Antrim, I was told that our auto was the first one ever seen there.

"On the road from Killagan to Dunloy we passed a man driving a cart that was filled with vegetables for the Ballymore market. 'Blood an' ounds,' Jerry shouted the jarley to the donkey, 'here comes a Abonamon feel, an' th' divil himself is pushin' it.'

"Our tour of Ireland was divided into three excursions. Dublin was the headquarters, and from there we 'ducked' out into the different counties. After a couple of days at the Dublin exposition we went up into the Province of Ulster. It was there we saw the Giant's Causeway, one of the grandest sights of Ireland.

CASTLES AS "EMPTIES"

"Our next trip was through the center and southeast of Ireland. The Wicklow Mountains and the Vale of Avoca were the principal points of interest we saw on this tour with a bunch of round towers thrown in. I tried to warm up to the ruins of these old castles, but it was no go. That kind of stuff looks like a case of empties to me.

"On the third and last trip from Dublin we visited the west and southwestern part of the country, and I wish I could have brought it back with me. Man, dear, but the people of Cork and Limerick and Tipperary and Kilkenny know how to make it pleasant for a stranger.

"It wasn't a case of looking for a tip either. A sixpence to a sharaveen-shont (that's Irish for servant) looks as big as Mayor McWilliams' button-hole bouquet which he usually wears. If you'd hand anything less than a franc to one of those garsong waiters in Paris he'd have you pinched.

"The last place we visited in Ireland was the town of Youghal, a few miles from Queenstown. I went there to see a relative of Jim Dolan's, who lives here. He had been in poor health for some time, he said, but he was feeling well again. Nothing would do but we had to stay for dinner with him. I never ate such corned beef and cabbage in all my life. The ploughoola (reception) he gave our party was grand. Before we left he had made us have a dhuc and dhuris (drink at the door).

"It was our good fortune to be at Drogheda on the last Sunday in July when they call Garlick Sunday. New potatoes are due on that day, and as the country around Drogheda produces the finest potatoes in the world, the opening of the season is a big event. Our party had a feed of new potatoes and buttermilk. If a man could ship potatoes and buttermilk from Drogheda to Peterborough, and have a restaurant he'd put those chop suey dumps out of business. From Ireland we went to London for a week, and then to Paris for ten days. I didn't see anything in either city that we can't show them in Toronto and Montreal, except a lot of old junk."

In summing up his impressions of Ireland Mr. Harris says: "Limerick has the prettiest girls in the world, Kerry the most beautiful scenery, Tipperary the finest butter, Antrim the best whiskey and Louth the smallest potatoes."

When a man or woman finds sickness coming on, such as indigestion, weak eyes, bowel complaint, kidney trouble, etc., it is time some atsention is given to the subject of food and drink.

In practically all such cases where coffee or tea is the drink, one can obtain relief by quitting the coffee or tea and taking Postum for he leaves off a drink that is an active producer of disease and takes in its place a powerful liquid food that contains elements for rebuilding the nerve centres which have heretofore been torn down. "There's a Reason."

The Farmer's Wives and Autos

Toronto, Oct 5. — Superintendent Putnam of Farmers' Institute stated yesterday morning that he had received numerous letters from women's institute members, complaining that "a reckless disregard of the speed law and other regulations," on the part of many automobilists had thinned the attendance at women's meetings.

"From the time the roads are in condition until the winter," says one woman, "we are afraid to drive anywhere. I know of cases where autos have frightened horses, and have passed on, even though the occupants of the buggies have been thrown out."

Another asks Mr. Putnam this question;

"Why should the people that have cleared the land and built the roads be compelled to relinquish the right to drive on our highways simply to enable rich people to dash along in their autos?"

"I have a fine driving horse," writes a third, "but I am afraid to drive out, and the autos are keeping me from our institute meetings."

Wireless Messages That Crossed the Atlantic Yesterday

Sydney, N.S., Oct. 5. — "Wireless telegraphy will be a commercial success within the time I have mentioned, said Signor Marconi yesterday in an interview. "Every day I am talking with Clifden and receiving replies." Asked for a message to be published in the paper, Marconi told his operator to send the following query;

"How is everything working today?"

"Smooth as oil" came the reply from the Clifden end.

Then Marconi asked; "How is news of progress being taken on the other side?"

"Commercial people jubilant and newspapers expressing confidence over ultimate results" came the reply.

"Everything is working most satisfactorily. I have no complaint to make," were the words of the inventor.

Marconi expressed himself as being pleased over the recent rise in Marconi stock which is now quoted at one pound, eight and threepence an increase of thirty per cent. within the last three weeks.

President Roosevelt to Join Forces with Kaiser

New York, Oct. 5.—An American correspondent in London, Mr. H. R. Chamberlain cables as follows: Europe has begun to take keen and spectacular interest in the sending of the American fleet to the Pacific. The general public here, as elsewhere, love theatrical politics, and they look to Kaiser Wilhelm and President Roosevelt as the world's chief entertainers in this feature of the game. They see nothing in the proposed naval demonstration but a provocative move against Japan, and they will await its outcome with lively impatience. The situation appears to them to involve nothing beyond a quarrel between the United States and Japan, and it cannot be said to-day that European sentiment inclines to either side. Very different indeed, is the view taken by the chancelleries of Europe and especially by Downing Street. European statesmen regard the matter with greater anxiety than any international crisis of recent years. It is in their eyes by no means the simple problem it appears to the man in the street.

Opinions agree in this, that the sending of the fleet, no matter with what peaceful protestations, is a distinctly provocative move, and the danger of untoward incidents, which, intentionally or unintentionally, might lead to war, is immense. In a word, if the American armada goes to the Far East, Europe will expect war to follow.

It is the general opinion of the diplomatic world that the premature settlement of the Russo-Japanese war was the greatest mistake in Mr. Roosevelt's career. Another year's campaign would have brought freedom within the grasp of the Russian people, and so exhausted Japan that the yellow danger would have been postponed to the distant future. Those who believe it is now imminent, share Mr. Roosevelt's reported conviction that the next crisis in human history will be a struggle in the Pacific, and they hope that he will force the issue before Japan recovers from her last war. This view is widely held in Berlin. Russia shares it, while she expects vindication of her military reputation in the enormous difficulties any power will encounter which becomes embroiled with her late enemy.

It is reported that there is a tacit or definite understanding that the German fleet will be held ready to protect American interests in the Atlantic. This would signify many things. It would be Kaiser Wilhelm's reply to all of King Edward's great diplomatic work of the past three years for safe-guarding the peace of Europe. It might easily result in arraying the United States and Germany against England and Japan. The Kaiser would by no means shrink from such an adventure nor would he be hopeless of other European assistance.

COMMON SENSE

Leads most intelligent people to use only medicines of known composition. Therefore it is that Dr. Pierce's medicines, the makers of which print every ingredient entering into them upon the bottle wrappers and attest its correctness under oath, are daily growing in favor. The composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines is open to everybody. Dr. Pierce being desirous of having the search light of investigation turned fully upon his formulæ, being confident that the better the composition of these medicines is known the more will their great curative merits be recognized. Being wholly made of the active medicinal principles extracted from native forest roots, by exact process original with Dr. Pierce, and without the use of a drop of alcohol, triple-refined and chemically pure glycerine being used instead in extracting and preserving the curative virtues residing in the roots employed, these medicines are entirely free from the objection of doing harm by creating an appetite for either alcoholic beverages or habit-forming drugs. Examine the formula on the bottle wrappers—the same as sworn to by Dr. Pierce, and you will find that his "Golden Medical Discovery," the great blood-purifier, stomach tonic and bowel regulator—the medicine which, while not recommended to cure consumption in its advanced stages (no medicine will do that) yet does cure all those catarrhal conditions of head and throat, weak stomach, torpid liver and bronchial troubles, weak lungs and hang-on-coughs, which, if neglected or badly treated lead up to and finally terminate in consumption.

Take the "Golden Medical Discovery" in time and it is not likely to disappoint you if only you give it a thorough fair trial. Don't expect miracles. It won't do supernatural things. You must exercise your patience and persevere in its use for a reasonable length of time to reap its full benefits. The ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's medicines are composed have the unqualified endorsement of scores of medical leaders—better than any amount of lay, or non-professional, testimonials. They are not given away to be experimented with but are sold by all dealers in medicines at reasonable prices.

News Briefs

Hamilton Is Disappointed

Hamilton, Ont. Oct. 5.—The assessment figures for Hamilton for the past year have been completed. The population of Hamilton is now 63,758, an increase in the past year of 2,813. This is considerably below the real figures, however, as there are suburbs just beyond the city line which are well populated, such as Crown Point with 1,500 people. There is a feeling of great disappointment that the figures did not show over 65,000. The increase in assessment for the year is $2,267,000.

Japanese Fishermen Sentenced

Vancouver, B. C., October 5.—The first sentence in the fall assizes was passed yesterday, when a Japanese fisherman got three months for assault. Several serious cases are to come up, among them those arrested in the recent riots and also the motorman and conductor of a car on the electric railway company's line, which ran over orders, with the result that a collision followed, and a man was killed. They are charged with manslaughter.

Company Will Mine Coal

Winnipeg, Oct. 5.—The expenditure of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the exploration of the company's coal lands in the Crow's Nest country has been announced to be a million and a half. If the use of this much capital makes the railway coal lands in the Crow's Nest district a most important factor in the Western Canada coal supply as soon as agreements which now bind the company are removed more active measures of development will be entered upon. Until 1908 the coal areas owned by the company must remain idle but at the expiration of that time it is expected three thousand tons daily will be shipped.

Official Meat Inspection

Ottawa, October 5.— In view of the large trade carried on in some parts of Canada in dressed meats, attention is directed to one of the requirements of the regulations made under the new Meat Inspection Act. The Department of Agriculture having assumed the inspecting of all meats and meat products sent out by the packing houses, its officials have decided to admit to the establishments under inspection only carcasses dressed in such a way as will enable the inspector best to tell if the animal, prior to slaughter, was free from disease. Provision has been made therefore, for the admission on inspection only of dressed carcases with the head, heart lungs, and liver held by their natural attachments.

Every farmer bringing dressed hogs or other animals to market must remember that unless the carcases are dressed in accordance with these regulations it will not be possible for the representatives of the packing houses to buy the carcases.

Local Citizens Did Not Bite at Swindle

Try to Get $5 on Strength of Fictitious Bequests

It seems that swindlers are still looking for that style of gentleman who is generally reported as being reproduced every minute. A day or two ago a George street business man received a neatly typewritten letter from a noted man in New York. The letter paper bore the heading "Leonard E. Drummond, Attorney-at-Law, 68 Sixth avenue, New York City," and the letter was to the effect that a gentleman of the same name as the person to whom the letter was addressed, had died in New York City, and had willed five shares of Canadian Pacific stock to the Peterborough man. The stock the letter went on to say, was value at $800, and would be forwarded to the person to whom the letter was addressed on receip of $5, the attorney's fees. The letter was signed "L. E. Drummond," and bore the date of Sept. 28th.

The business man did not bite as he knew no relative in New York of the name given in the letter, and the particulars were not full enough to satisfy him, so the V. did not teach the slick Aleck.

This is not the only attempt to swindle local men as others have received similar communications.

Mr. Alf. Parker's Plucky Procedure

Burnt Out a Few Days Ago But Still In Full Operation

Mr. Alf. Parker, proprietor of the dyeworks on Charlotte street, told a Times representative, while showing the latter through his extensive plant recently badly injured by fire that he had not had one cent of insurance on the building. It seems that Mr Parker has carried insurance for many years on the place but a few days before the fire some misunderstanding arose and pending adjustment of same the fire took place and Mr Parker is thus some $2000 out of pocket for repairs.

Well, whether Mr Parker pays for the rebuilding out of his own bank roll, or out of what he might have got from any insurance company, the work in progress in rebuilding shows that Mr. Parker is of that sturdy Johnny Canuck build that does not know defeat. It was really marvellous yesterday to see a score of two of girls doing work in a place that had, only a day or two previously been burnt out. Still such was the situation. There, under the shingles, still bright yellow in their prime, and just split from the original block, were some 25 to 30 girls busily engaged in handling goods of all kinds on machines standing in full sight of the blackened walls. Still the girls were turning out as perfect work as before the fire. Mr. Parker hopes to be in full working operation by Monday at least. It is such men as this that do not know defeat, and that upbuild our young and lusty Dominion.

Hard Work on the Y. M. C. A. Campaign

The Six Day Campaign of the Y.M.C.A. is now being carried out enthusiastically. The Citizens' Committee, and Young Men's and Boys' Committees, are getting down to work—that will ensure success. Nothing can, however be taken for granted, and everybody will have to push hard if the $1800 in subscriptions and the $500 in memberships are to be secured by eight o'clock on Tuesday evening next, when the campaign will close.

Police After a Very Unwarranted Clue

Yesterday afternoon about 3.30 o'clock, the telephone in the police station rang out a call. P. C. McGinty answered the call, and was told that three tramps were in McAllister's barn in the east ward and refused to go when told. The officer, accompanied by P. C. Adams hustled over the bridge, evidently with a desire to do doughty deeds and earn a medal for chivalrous action. The two officers, it must be admitted, went hot-footed to the recently and ill-reputed of our city. They were followed by a Times man and his friend, the former eager for news and the friend with a view towards possible adventure and excitement. After crossing the raging waters of the Otonabee, the two officers took their bearings. They called first at the Rapid Tool Company's offices for information to be careful, we'll know what they learned there. Still they got a further move on and tried all the doors of the now out of business grist mill. After trying the front doors the officers tackled the rear portion of the premises. Here they found an aged retainer of the place who told them the why and wherefore of the alarm sent in. It seems that three boys or young men had had a drinking bout in a rear portion of the mill, but had departed taking their jag with them previous to arrival of the officers. Surely people should use a little more discretion before taking members of our numerically too limited police force away to Ashburnham to arrest nothing more tangible than the ghost of a bygone spree. Had even a cork, a cork screw or even a disk been left to arrest, there might be some excuse, but yesterday there was only a scent of G. & Wo. of Falstaff's beer to prove that any one had been on the premises and no officer can arrest a scent of liquor although, were he not on the Peterborough force, he might carry one.

Message From Ross Says Swindlers Took $50,000 From Him

Rev. Malcolm McGregor, uncle of Dugald Ross, Streetsville, whose mysterious disappearance from a London, England, hotel and subsequent adventures have attracted considerable attention, yesterday morning received the following cablegram from Clougher, London.

"Dugald Ross visited our office today and reports that he was victimized by South African diamond mine promoters, losing $50,000 cash. He is returning to Canada this month. He learned that the money had been drawn out just before he reached the bank the promoters skipping the country being depressed by the occurrence, he left the city to recuperate."

London, Oct. 4. — Interviews with Ross published in London newspapers appear contradictory. To the evening News he is reported to have stated in reply to a question as to who he left London, that he had been "done out of £37,000 in connection with the Kimberley diamond mine shares."

To a Star man Ross said he left London to go after a man who from inquiries he had since made seemed to have escaped to the continent, while yet another insistent interviewer claimed that he declared he was really chasing a man who had robbed him of £20,000. Both the News and the Star says that Ross indulged in ambitions of winning the Derby with a Canadian horse and jockey and that, apparently ignorant of the conditions of entry for the famous race, he intended next year starting an establishment at Newmarket. R. A. Smith & Company, Broad street house, state that Ross recently made proposals for the development of a large tract of land in Ontario, which if they had gone through meant payment to him of £20,000. The scheme, however, was dropped by those who interested themselves in it.

To the Chronicle man he seems to have stated that he had lost between £30,000 and £40,000 in stock exchange transactions, and in addition had failed to negotiate a £20,000 cheque or to find the man who gave it to him. He added that his present difficulties had quite upset his arrangements, and it would take him five of six years to recover. Ross appeared somewhat worried, but took the matter fairly coolly.

Rev. Malcolm McGregor, Dugald Ross' uncle, says that there is nothing in these later despatches to shake his faith in the young man's integrity.

This opinion is shared by members of the young man's family, in discussing the matter.

G. Vanderbilt will Wed Count

New York, Oct. 4.—Formal announcement of the engagement of Miss Gladys Vanderbilt to Count Jassio Szechanyi of Hungary, has been made in the Herald. The Herald states that the announcements is authorized. No date has been set for the wedding, but it is expected that it will take place at The Breakers, the Vanderbilt mansion in New York, sometime this autumn. The count, who is the youngest son of the late Count Emerich Szechany, for some years ambassador from Austria-Hungary to Germany, is now in Newport having arrived from Europe Tuesday night. He is 28 years old, rich, and good looking, has an hereditary seat in the Hungarian parliament, and is one of the chamberlains of the Austrian Emperor.

MOTHER MADE MATCH

It is recalled in Vienna that when Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and her daughter were in Hungary a month ago, they spent much time on the estate and in the company of the young count.

The count is 28 years of age, a court chamberlain, and a lieutenant in the reserves. His elder brother, Count Dyonis Szechanyi married Count Ida Caraman Chimay. It is believed here that the count's engagement to Miss Vanderbilt recently was settled during the visit to Florence.

WORTH $10,000,000

Announcement of the engagement will be received with great interest both here and in Europe, owing to the prominence of both families. Miss Vanderbilt, who is the young wife of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, and Mrs. Vanderbilt, inherited from her father a fortune of more than $10,000,000. She came into possession of this inheritance on attaining her majority last August.

FALLEN FAD

New Zealand has long been a terror to the older countries of the world. The Pacific colony set herself up as a country of advanced ideas, and the people of the older communities were constantly being reminded that "they do these things better in New Zealand y' know." All manner of fads seemed to succeed in New Zealand, and the whole colony seemed to be made up of faddists, and their admirers here never tired of telling other people how well the thing worked in New Zealand. One of the most famous of the New Zealand fads has been compulsory arbitration, and the rise and fall of this fad in that colony possibly points to the reason why fads have so flourished in that Pacific colony. Our esteemed contemporary, Professor Goldwin Smith, has been telling the people of New Zealand for many years that compulsory arbitration would come to an end just as soon as wages began to go down. In this week's Weekly Sun (Toronto) Goldwin Smith says; "So long as it was an instrument in the hands of labbers for raising wages, it was popular; but when it begins to operate in the way of reduction of wages, its popularity departs. The law, it seems, in case of refusal to work prescribes a fine, and in default of payment of the fine, imprisonment. Are the legislators of New Zealand simple enough to think that they can compel a free man to work? If they could compel him to work, could they compel him to work well? They would have to borrow a slave-driver's whip. Nor could they compel an employer to go on employing men at a rate of wages which he did not think it his interest to pay. After all, we are brought back to the simple truth that in a free country what rules and must rule prices and wages is the market."

James J. Hill says there is to be no more railroad building. It seems but the other day we were told on the same high authority that railroad building was only beginning. James is getting queer in his old age.

[illegible] Canadian affairs during the time that His Excellency was Governor-General here should be familiar to all Canadians, and therefore an article, entitled "The Dufferin Family," by Margaret Eadie Henderson, in the October Canadian Magazine, is of unusual interest. Miss Henderson tells about incidents in the life of this distinguished Irish family quite apart from what might be regarded as their purely public affairs. The October number contains other important contributions. Prof. Adam Shortt has an article entitled "A Personality in Journalism," being an appreciation of Mr. J. A. Macdonald, Editor of The Toronto Globe. The following contributions are also included in the number; "Canadian Art and its Critics," by J. A. Radford, illustrated; "The Deer of British Columbia," by Allan Brooks, illustrated; "Canadians in Telephone Development," by Randolph Carlyle, illustrated; "The Irony of British Rule in India," by Saint N. Sing, besides a number of other articles and five short stories.

Trial Catarrh treatments are being mailed out free, on request, by Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this scientific prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Terminus

Vancouver, Oct. 5.—Recent reports from the north have given rise to a great amount of speculation with regard to the G.T.P. proposed terminals at Prince Rupert. The manner in which the properties at that point are being handled and the secrecy with which the operations are being carried on by them have served to strengthen the belief that within a short time something of a radical nature will be announced. For some time past the belief has been growing that another port will be developed for handling G.T.P. business at Pacific terminals, before the development of Prince Rupert is proceeded with. It is claimed by men who have made a careful study of the situation up the north shore, and know the lay of the land there, that in all probability a port will be opened at the head of Kitamat arm, for handling construction material and supplies. This belief is based on several circumstances, and is being backed strongly by men who have invested in properties in that locality. In the first place the cost of constructing the line connecting the upper waters of the Skeena with the Fraser, via the Bulkley River, the Nechaco and their branches, will be tremendous, running into the millions for construction alone. This does not include the cost of transporting the supplies. The second point in the contention is that rumor has it that the G.T.P. is looking for the possession of a charter for a railway up the Kitamat valley, which was granted some time ago. The grade through this valley is an easy one, less than one per cent., and would cut off a considerable length of most difficult construction. From the head water of the Kitamat there would be no great difficulty in location a line to connect with the east slope of the Rockies.

The adoption of Kitamat would shorten the route by about fifty miles, resulting in a consequent reduction in the cost of construction while entailing a longer sea voyage to reach its more inland waters.

Expenditures which have already been made at Prince Rupert indicate that it will not be abandoned, though its development may be delayed. It is understood that G.T.P. officials are attempting to get possession of more suitable land at the head of the arm and those on the ground are reluctant to part with their holdings.

WHEN NAPOLEON WALKED.

An Incident of the Tragic Retreat From Moscow.

It was on Nov. 25, at about 7 o'clock in the morning, when we saw the head of the column. The first we saw were generals, a few of whom were on horseback, but the majority on foot. The latter painfully dragged themselves along, almost all having their feet frozen and bound up in rags and pieces of sheepskin and dying of hunger. We then saw what was left of the cavalry of the guard. The emperor came next on foot, with a stick in his hand. He was muffled up in a large capote lined with fur and wore on his head an amaranthine velvet cap edged with black foxskin. On his right marched, also on foot, King Murat; on his left, Prince Eugene, viceroy of Italy; then Berthier, prince of Neufchatel; Ney, Mortier, Lefebvre and other marshals and generals whose corps had been partly destroyed.

They were followed by 700 to 800 officers and suboffficers, marching in order and bearing in the greatest silence the eagles of the regiments to which they had belonged and that had so often led them to victory. They were the remnant of over 60,000 men. My poor Picart, who had not seen the army for a month, gazed on silently, but his convulsive movements showed only too well what he felt. I saw big tears roll down the cheeks and fall on his mustache, from which icicles were hanging. Then, turning to me, "Really, compatriot, I do not know whether I am asleep or awake; I weep because I have seen our emperor marching on foot, a stick in his hand—he that was so great and who has made us so proud!"—"Memoires of Sergeant Bourgogne."

FOREIGN MONEY.

A Showman's Experience With Counterfeit Coins In Naples.

"When you are abroad," said a tourist agent, "look out for counterfeit money. In France and Italy especially look out. There are a lot of small souled French and Italians who save up counterfeit money all the year to dump it on the tourist trade in the summer.

"I said to look out, but really that is impossible. An American tourist has his hands full just to count foreign money, with its centimes and lyres, its francs and centesimi, and when too often he is unable to count this money how can he detect counterfeits in it?

"Italy is the worst country, and it is safe to say that every tourist loses in bad money there 1 or 2 per cent of all that passes through his hands.

"When Buffalo Bill showed in Naples the audience was enormous, but the next day when the business manager went to bank the receipts of the night, lo and behold, over a thousand dollars in counterfeit money had been taken in.

"Buffalo Bill in person went and complained to the prefect, or chief of police.

"'They passed a thousand dollars on you in counterfeit?' said the prefect.

"'They did,' said Buffalo Bill bitterly.

Thunder in Various Regions.

Java is said to be the region of the globe where it thunders oftenest, having thunderstorms ninety-seven days in the year. After it are Sumatra, with eighty-six days; Hindustan, with fifty-six; Borneo, with fifty-four; the Gold Coast, with fifty-two, and Rio de Janeiro, with fifty-one. In Europe, Italy occupies the first place, with thirty-eight days of thunder, while France and southern Russia have sixteen days. Great Britain and Switzerland have each seven days, and Norway has four. Thunder is rare at Cairo, being heard only three days in the year, and extremely rare in northern Turkestan and the polar regions.

The "Dandy Horse."

The father of the bicycle tribe, the "dandy horse," was invented in 1818 by Baron von Draise of Paris. It consisted of two wheels about thirty inches in diameter running one in the wake of the other and connected by a beam of wood, upon which, half way from each end, was a saddle or perch, an arm rest in front completing the machine. It was propelled by kicking the ground with the right and left foot alternately. It was from such a crude affair that the modern bicycle was slowly evolved.

Taking No Chances.

The court appointed a young lawyer to defend a Georgia darky, but after the prisoner had looked the lawyer over he said:

"No, Mister Jedge, I reckon not. De las' time I got in de penitentiary I had a man dat look des lak him to defend me, so des leave him out de case en gimme ten years!"

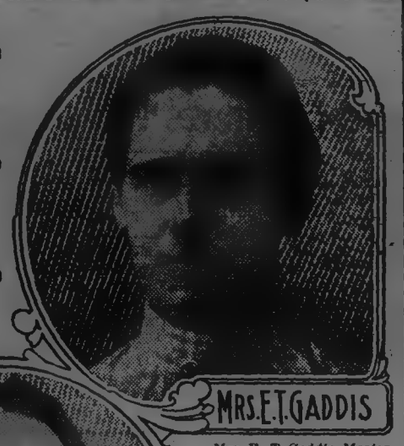
The housewife is the one who is best able to judge of the relative merits of family medicines. It is she that knows the many uses of Peruna in the family. It is upon her testimonial that chiefly depends the popularity which Peruna enjoys.



MRS. E. T. GADDIS

Mrs. E. T. Gaddis, Marion, N. C., writes:

"Before I commenced to take Peruna I could not do any hard work without suffering great pain. I took Peruna and Manalin, and can say with pleasure they have done more for me than any other medicine I have ever taken. Now I am as well as ever, I do all my own work and it never hurts me at all. I think Peruna is a great medicine for womankind."

From Grateful Woman.

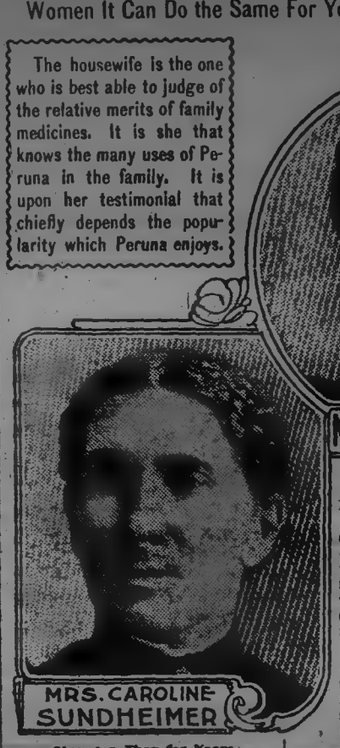
"I was troubled with suppressed and painful menstruation. I took Peruna according to your directions, and now I am well."—Mrs. James Eighmey, Grape, Mich.

"We have been using Peruna for some time. To speak from a standpoint of experience I can candidly say that Peruna is the remedy for female weakness. "From h personal test and from the testimony of many others I shall not hesitate to recommend it, especially to all suffering women."—Mrs. M. P. Jones, Burning Springs, Ky.

"I suffered from catarrh for many years, but since taking Peruna I feel strong and well. As I used Peruna and Manalin while I was passing through the change of life, I am positively convinced your beneficial remedies have relieved me of all my ills."—Mrs. Mathilde Richter, Doniphan, Neb.

PE-RU-NA FOR PELVIC DISEASES.

"I suffered with pelvic catarrh until I wrote to Dr. Hartman, and after taking treatment as he advised, I can say I am cured of this most trying affliction, for which I am truly thankful. I never felt better in my life than I do at present."—Mrs. Etta Booker, Dunham, Sask, N. W. T., Can.



MRS. CAROLINE SUNDHEIMER

Stronger Than for Years.

Mrs. Caroline Sundheimer, Clarks, La., writes:

"I am feeling quite well now. I can work again and am stronger than I have been for years, and I do believe that Peruna saved my life.

"I am very thankful to you for your advice. I will advise all I can to take your medicine."

MRS. A. E. STOUFFER

Pe-ru-na Gave Health.

Mrs. A. E. Stouffer, Capioma, Kansas, writes:

"Peruna has given me health and strength; it is the best medicine that was ever made for women. My friends say they never saw such a change in a woman. I talk to every one about Peruna. I cannot say too much for it."

A Remedy For Women.

It is safe to say that we have thousands of letters written to Dr. Hartman from women who repeat the same sentiment to be found in Mrs. Stouffer's testimonial: "My friends say they never saw such a change in a woman." Over and over again this sentence is penned by grateful women who are more than willing that we should use their words to assist other suffering women in finding a cure.

Peruna is a great medicine for women. It cleanses the inside of the body in much the same way that water cleanses the outside of the body.

Stood In With Letter Carrier

Speaking about jealousy! Yesterday a prominent employe of the city happened in course of conversation to note that a friend of his had yesterday had a letter delivered at his, the friend's residence by a letter carrier, the postage stamp on which cost only one cent. This city official, when he ascertained that such a terrible breach of the postal laws had been inadvertently made, sprang two feet in the air, clacked his heels together and said, "Why this morning a letter for me was held in the post office just because there was only a one cent stamp on the envelope and I was told I had to pay two cents more before I could get the letter. I told the post-office people, I would not take the letter, on principle and now that I have seen what you got delivered to you for one cent, I'm going right up to that office and raise berry mell. We still expected to see no depletion in the post office staff this morning.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2000 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 70 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000 - PAR VALUE $1.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

"He's great on fevers," he said, "and is good on curin' sick folks," so, though he would have preferred someone else should have been called, confidence in the young doctor's skill won the day, and grandpa consented.

This, then, was the errand of Farmer Green, and with his usual bluntness he said to the recreant doctor, who chanced to be at home:

"Wall, you nigh about killed our little Madge t'other day, when you refused the stifficut, and now we want you to cure her."

The doctor looked up in surprise, but Farmer Green soon explained his meaning, making out a most aggravated case, and representing Maddy as wild with delirium.

"Keeps talkin' about the big books, the Latin, and the Hebrew, and even the Catechism, as if such was 'lowed in our school. I s'pose you didn't know no better; but if Maddy dies, you'll have it to answer for, I reckon."

The doctor did not try to excuse himself, but hastily took down the medicines he thought he might need, and stowed them carefully away. He had expected to hear from that examination, but not in this way, and rather nervously he made some inquiries, as to how long she had been ill, and so forth.

Maddy's case lost nothing by Mr. Green's account, and by the time the doctor's horse was ready, and he on his way to the cottage, he had arrived at the conclusion that of all the villainous men outside the walls of the State's prison, he was the most villainous, and Guy Remington next.

What a cosy little chamber it was where Maddy lay, just such a room as a girl like her might be supposed to occupy, and the bachelor doctor felt like treading upon forbidden ground as he entered the room so rife with girlish habits, from the fairy slippers hung on a peg, to the fanciful little workbox made of cones and acorns. Maddy was asleep, and sitting down beside her he asked that the shawl which had been pinned across the window might be removed so that he could see her, and thus judge better of her condition. They took the shawl away, and the sunlight came streaming in, disclosing to the doctor's view the face never before seen distinctly, or thought about, if seen. It was ghastly pale, save where the hot blood seemed bursting through the cheeks, while the beautiful brown hair was brushed back from the brow where the veins were swollen and full. The lips were slightly apart, and the hot breath came in quick, panting gasps, while occasionally a faint moan escaped them, and once the doctor heard, or thought he heard, the sound of his own name. One little dimpled hand lay upon the bedspread, but the doctor did not touch it. Ordinarily he would have grasped it as readily as if it had been a piece of marble, but the sight of Maddy, lying there so sick, and the fearing he had helped to bring her where she was, awoke to life a curious state of feeling with regard to her, making him almost as nervous as on the day when she appeared before him as candidate No. 1.

"Feel her pulse, doctor; they are faster 'most than you can count," Grandma Markham whispered; and thus entreated, the doctor took the soft hand in his own, its touch sending through his frame a thrill such as the touch of no other hand had ever sent.

Somehow the act reassured him. All fear of Maddy vanished, leaving behind only an intense desire to help, if possible, the young girl whose fingers seemed to cling around his own as he felt for and found the rapid pulse.

"If she would awaken," he said, laying the hand softly down and placing his other upon her forehead, where the great sweat-drops lay.

And, after a time, Maddy did awaken, but in the eyes fixed, for a moment, so intently on him, there was no look of recognition, and the doctor was half glad that it was so. He did not wish her to associate him with her late disastrous failure; he would rather she should think of him as someone come to cure her, for cure her he would, he said to himself, as he gazed into her childish face and thought how sad it was for such as she to die. When first he entered the cottage he had been struck with the extreme plainness of the furniture, betokening that wealth had not there an abiding place, but now he forgot everything except the sick girl, who grew more and more restless, talking of him and the Latin verb which meant "to love," she said, and which was not in the grammar.

"Guy was a fool and I was a brute," the doctor muttered, as he folded up the bits of paper whose contents he hoped might do much toward saving Maddy's life.

Then, promising to come again, he rode rapidly away, to visit other patients, who, that afternoon, were in danger of being sadly neglected, so constantly was their young physician's mind dwelling upon the little low-walled chamber where Maddy Clyde was lying. As night closed in she knew them all, and heard that Dr. Holbrook had been there prescribing for her. Turning her face to the wall, she seemed to be thinking; then, calling her grandmother to her, she whispered: "Did he smooth my hair back and say, 'poor child'?"

Her grandmother hardly thought he did, though she was not in the room all the time, she said. "He had stayed a long while and was greatly interested."

Maddy had a vague remembrance of such an incident, and in her heart forgave the doctor for his rejection, thinking only how handsome he had looked, even while tormenting her with such unheard of questions, and how kind he was to her now. The sight of her grandfather awakened a new train of ideas, and bidding him to sit beside her, she asked if their home must be sold. Maddy was not to be put off with an evasion, and so grandpa told her honestly at last that Sloeum would foreclose, but not while she was sick; he had been easy that day by Mr. Green, and had promised so much forbearance.

This was the last rational conversation held with Maddy for many a week, and when next morning the doctor came, there was a look of deep anxiety upon his face as he watched the alarming symptoms of his delirious patient, who talked incessantly, not of the examination now, but of the mortgage and the foreclosure, begging the doctor to see that the house was not sold, to tell them she was earning thirty-six dollars by teaching school, that Beauty would be sold to save their dear old home. All this was strange at first to the doctor, but the rather voluble Mrs. Green, who had come to Grandma Markham's relief, enlightened him, dwelling with a kind of malicious pleasure upon the fact that Maddy's earnings, had she been permitted to get a "stifficut," were to be appropriated toward paying the debt.

If the doctor had hated himself the previous day when he rode from the red cottage gate, he hated himself doubly now as he went dashing down the road, determined to resign his office of school inspector that very day. And he did.

Summoning around him those who had been most active in electing him, he refused to officiate again, assuring them that if any more candidates came he should either turn them from his door or give them a certificate without asking a question.

"Put anybody you like in my place," he said; "anybody but Guy Remington. Don't for thunder's sake take him."

There was no probability of this, as Guy lived in another town, and could not have officiated had he wished. But the doctor was too much excited to reason upon anything save Madeline Clyde's case. That he perfectly understood; and during the next few weeks his other patients waited many times in vain for his coming, while he sat by Maddy's side watching every change, whether for the worse or better. Even Agnes Remington was totally neglected; and so one day she sent Guy down to Devonshire to say that as Jessie seemed more than usually delicate, she wished the doctor to take her under his charge and visit her at least once a week. The doctor was not at home, but Tom said he expected him every moment. So seating himself in the armchair, Guy waited until he came.

"Well, Hal," he began, jocosely, but the joking words he would have uttered next died on his lips as he noticed the strange look of excitement and anxiety on the doctor's face. "What is it?" he asked. "Are all your patients dead?"

Stomach troubles, Heart and Kidney ailments can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the Stomach, etc. Sold by all dealers.

Moths and Rugs.

Dyed rugs, such as dog and goat skins, are not attacked by moths, because in curing and dyeing them poisons are put in that make them practically immune from attacks by these insects, but the contrary is true of the natural skins, such as polar bear, tiger, leopard, etc., for, though the curing process they go through contains more preservatives than are put into that used on muffs, boas, etc., they are much more likely to attract these destructive insects than those that are dyed.

Best Bath Towel.

A crash towel is apt to be a little too harsh for a baby's delicate skin. Cotton birdseye diapering that has been washed and smoothly ironed several times makes about the best towel for a young baby's use. The widest width of goods that come should be selected and the towel made long enough to reach almost to the bottom of the mother's skirt when it is pinned to her waist. It will then be the proper size to roll the baby up in when he comes out of his tub.

Hygienic Pie Crust.

A hygienic pie crust has been found to be a possibility. One which children or grown people with weak digestion may eat with impunity is made of one heaping cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one and one-half teaspoonsful of salt sifted together and mixed with a heaping tablespoonful of suet which has been melted and allowed to cool. Add enough rich milk to make the dough as soft as can be handled. This will make one large pie.

Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists, small free Trial Boxes of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing certainly, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of real, genuine merit. But that article must possess true merit, else the test will condemn, rather than advance it. Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing antiseptic balm put up in beautiful nickel capped glass jars at 50c. Such soothing agents as Oil Eucalyptus, Thymol, Menthol, etc., are incorporated into a velvety, cream like Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Shoop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means also use internally, Dr Shoop's Restorative, Stomach distress, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, Biliousness, bad taste, etc. surely call for Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

For uncomplicated catarrh only of the nose and throat nothing else, however, need be used but Easy money seldom lands you on Easy street.

No, Clarinda,
You're mistaken.
That insistent
Voice you hear
Bounding lightly
O'er the prairies
Like a fog horn
Strong and clear
Does not come from

Out with medicine
To sell,
Nor is it
A politician
Casting o'er
The land a spell.
It is not

Barking for
A three ring show,
Nor is it from
One with babies
And with balls
For you to throw.
It is from
The western farmer,

Of the land,
Who has hayseed

In his hand,

In tones pathetic
To come on
And save his crops.

"I know something even more necessary than that," declared the flippant one.

"Perhaps you refer to strength, good heart action, etc. All very necessary, it is true, but not the one essential."

"No, I was thinking of something else."

"And pray what is it?" asked the professor, with a note of impatience in his voice.

"Water."

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proven mining land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accelsior and Accidental No. 2 lode claims situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles south of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross cuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work, goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this growing Mine.

Stock will be listed and transferable on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Systematic Catarrh Has But One Cure

Lotions and Powders Will Never Help Unless the Blood is Given Attention

The way to radically and permanently cure catarrh is to cleanse the blood of the unhealthy secretions that keep the mucous membrane inflamed.

Catarrhal poison usually interferes with the stomach, kidneys and liver. These organs must be properly toned and strengthened, otherwise you feel sick all over.

Try to direct to the source of the trouble—to cleanse, nourish and purify the blood—where can you find anything so potent as Dr. Hamilton's Pills?

As the blood medicine regulates the eliminating organs and completely drives the virus of catarrh out of the system. Thousands of cures prove this.

Of course to clear the nose and head of mucous discharges, Dr. Hamilton recommends the use of Catarrhozone Inhaler which, if used with his pills of Mandrake and Butternut, cures the most obstinate case of Catarrh ever known. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills in 25c. boxes.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Lindsay Runner Coming Here

Lindsay Post says; Geo. Thornbury, the runner who came second in the five-mile race on fair day here, may go to Peterborough. The Peterborough athletic societies have had "feelers" out interviewing the runner and are endeavoring to "transplant" him. It's a shame that Lindsay hasn't a athletic society that can take care of and train Victoria county athletics at which there are not a few, without letting them drift to Peterborough.

To Meet Next Week

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Protestant Home will be held next Tuesday, Oct. 8th., at 3.30 o'clock in the Home. The members of the board earnestly invite all who feel any interest in this charitable work for the aged to attend the meeting at which reports of the work of the past year, the present condition of the Home and plans for work will be discussed. This is the only institution the city has for the care of the aged Protestant poor and the work is one which should enlist the sympathy of a much larger number of ladies than the few who have in the past taken interest in the work.

Trouble for Street Railway

Yesterday an evidently undesigned contre temps occurred at the corner of George and Charlotte streets. As is known to most of our citizens the Peterborough Radial Railway Company are replacing their switches, frogs, etc., at this corner and, under instruction of Mr. H. O. Fisk, the electrical expert of the company, are hustling the work through. Unfortunately yesterday it became necessary to place a hydrant on George street in front of the Custom House. This materially interfered with the work of the street railway people as they had to leave a passage for traffic on our main thoroughfare.

Charlotte Street News' Vendor Kicks

Mr. Murphy, the Charlotte street news dealer, is out after the scalps of our local custom house officers. He intimates that whilst Chicago papers are "duty free" that such periodicals are held by the custom house authorities so that his sales are frustrated and his money lost as well as his customers being deprived of what they want. If Mr. Murphy's contention is well founded, he certainly has a grievance. Still, any one having knowledge of what custom house officers have to contend with, whilst trying to satisfy the public will know why angels are invisible and why so few feathers from their wings are gathered up in the public streets.

Mr. Geo. Sanderson Won Many Prizes

Mr. George Sanderson has been very successful as a prize winner at Peterborough. He took first for his handsome team of Percherons. He also got first and second for the same horses shown single, and won the special prize awarded by Mr. D. Hughes Charles, manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Peterborough for best agricultural horses. Mr. Sanderson is certainly to be congratulated. Mr. Robt. Shaw's splendid team also came in for a liberal share of the prizes. In the heavy draught class he secured first for his team and second and third for them shown singly. Mr. Geo. Brown secured second for his handsome team of drivers, and Mr. Wm. Leith got third place in one of the races. This is a pretty good showing for Millbrook horses. With Leicester sheep, Mr. Wm. McKnight carried off ten first prizes, and Messrs. Robt. Vance & Son carried off several first prizes, with a number of Cotswold sheep and also for swine.—Millbrook Mirror.

WHAT TO DO WITH JAPS IS WORLD'S GREAT PROBLEM

So Says General Booth, Who is Amazed at Their Versatility--Trouble to Come When World is Filled Up

Rochester, Oct. 6.—General Booth during an interview here, was asked as to the attitude of the Salvation Army towards the Japanese in British Columbia.

"That is not our business," he said, "we have no politics and no national lines in the army. If a Jap or a Canadian or an Englishman is in trouble, the Army seeks to help him. All men are our brothers. I am cosmopolitan. I am going to Germany soon, and there they forget I am an Englishman, as they forget it in America. The great question is, how can we make everybody happy and good?"

General Booth said he regarded the question of what was to become of the people of Japan as the most serious that confronted the world.

"Here are millions of ingenious, industrious, persevering and ambitious people. They are willing to live on almost nothing, and they are mastering every line of manufacture. I spent some time in Japan, only a little while ago and I was amazed at their intelligence and versatility. They are now building three Dreadnaughts and I suppose they are building them at a quarter of the cost in the United States. We try to build up a high wall to keep them out, but they climb over or get through. What is to come when all the world is filled up? That will be the trouble of the future, but it will not come in my time. We have Africa and South America to take the surplus population for some years to come.

At the conclusion of the interview General Booth shook hands again cordially with the reporters as he ushered them out of the room. It was the easiest interview they had obtained in many a day.

SENATOR COX'S GIFT TO BARNARDO HOME

Mr. Owens Wants Definite Settlement or the Home May be Located in Toronto

Mr. Owens one of the most prominent officials of the Barnardo Homes in Canada was in the city last week considering the future of the local Barnardo Home. It may not be generally known, that the gentleman of whose great progress both political and business life, Peterborough is naturally proud, viz., Hon. Senator Geo. A. Cox, an old Peterborough boy, very generously placed the fine property occupied by the Barnardo Home here at the disposal of that charity. It has been found that the heating facilities and sanitary arrangements are absolutely inadequate to requirements of the home. Extensive improvements will be necessary to make the place habitable. Such improvements are absolutely necessary to use the place for the purpose required.

It is generally understood that Senator Cox, in addition to the many charitable gifts he has given of late and former years, gave the late Dr. Barnardo, originator of the wide-spread charitable work carried on under the latter's name, a promise that in memory of the late Mrs. Cox, he would present the property occupied by the local Barnardo Home, and that it would be publicly known as the "Margaret Cox Girls Home."

Now as the necessary improvements will cost a large sum of money, it is intimated that unless an actual transfer of the property is made that the home, for so many years carried on in Peterborough, will be removed to Toronto. There is however no possible doubt but what, when this matter is presented in tangible form to the Senator that he will at once have the necessary papers drawn up and the property handed over as above noted to the Barnardo Home authorities.

Wanted Her Husband Arrested

A woman from another town called at the police station Saturday afternoon shortly after 3.30 o'clock, and asked Chief Roszel to prevent her husband from leaving the city. She offered to give him a photograph of him and said she had traced him here and said he is living with another woman. As there is no charge against the man the chief could take no action.

This is Worth Saving

Special Envoy to the Japanese Government

Ottawa, Oct. 4.—If it is found that Hon Rodolphe Lemieux's absence from Parliament during part of the coming session will not seriously interfere with the legislative program affecting the postoffice and labor departments, it is probable that he will be the minister selected by the government to go to Tokio on the 20th inst., and confer with the Japanese government in respect to immigration and trade relations between the two countries. Mr. Lemieux is especially well equipped for the task. He was in close touch with Prince Fushimi during the visit of the Japanese member of the Royal family in Ottawa, and as minister of labor would naturally be entrusted with a mission which so intimately concerns the interests of the labouring classes in British Columbia. It is also not improbable that the minister may be accompanied by a high official of the government, who would supplement the former's diplomatic efforts by collecting first-hand information as to the economic and sociological aspects of the whole question of Oriental immigration for the guidance of the government in formulating a wise immigration policy in respect to the teeming populations of Japan, China and India.

Whether the Japanese race is easily assimilable or not with the Canadian people, it is a significant fact that a very large percentage of them are qualifying to become permanent citizens of this country, and to take at least a voting interest in political affairs by taking out naturalization papers. The records of the secretary of state department show that up to July last no less than 3,526 Japanese have taken the oath of allegiance to the British Crown. Prior to 1902, when the present naturalization act came into force, 2,733 naturalization papers had been granted to Japanese. In 1902 there were 67 naturalized, in 1903 there were 270 In 1904 there were 82 In 1905 there were 19. In 1906 up to July 1, 10, and for the following twelve months 206. The census of 1901 showed the total Japanese population of Canada to be only 3,612, and from then until 1906 only 354 Japanese immigrants entered the Dominion. Since it requires a three years' residence in the country before naturalization papers can be taken out, the above figures point to the fact that almost all of the present Japanese population who are eligible to become naturalized have availed themselves of the privilege.

Sixty-Three Japanese Girls Killed

Tokio Oct. 6.—A terrible explosion occurred yesterday morning at the Takatgaka factory, Osaka, while a number of girls were at work sorting shells and cartridges which had been condemned.

Sixty-three of the girls were killed and over sixty others injured.

Osaka has well on to a million people. It is the industrial and commercial center of Japan and contains the arsenal and mint. It is located on the south of the principal island of Japan and is on the coast.

Popular Officer Will Go West

Adjutant Wiggins Will Move to Windsor Ont.

Yesterday evening an interesting though somewhat sad service was held in the Salvation Army Barracks when Adjt. and Mrs. Wiggins bade their formal farewell to their comrade. Both the adjutant and Mrs Wiggins in their too short stay in the city have made many friends and succeeded in greatly advancing the interests and good work of the Army here.

The adjutant on Saturday received formal notice that he will be moved to Windsor, to which city he and Mrs. Wiggins expect to go on Thursday. They will, however, en route attend the five days' Congress of the Army in Toronto. From there they will go to their new home.

Tomorrow evening a grand Hallelujah wedding will be held at the barracks, when a lady members of the local corps will wed a leading Salvationist of Toronto. Brigadier Collier, of Toronto, will tie the nuptial knot, and a very pleasant time is assured.

GENOROUS OFFER TO ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Lady, Living at a Distance, Offers Handsome Brass Candelabra in Memory of a Deceased Member of the Church

At yesterday morning's service in St. John's church the rector, Rev. Canon Davidson gave notice that a handsome ornamental candelabra had been offered to the church by a lady living at a distance in memory of a deceased member of his congregation. Whilst this would be a handsome addition to the interior of this sacred edifice, it may not be accepted unless a similar candelabra is given by some one else as it would require two to look well. We understand that the one now offered is a handsome brass structure standing six or seven feet high and adapted to the use of wax or artificial candles.

What Hamilton Thinks of Argo-Tigers' Shut Out

Hamilton Spectator; As will be seen in the report of the meeting of the O.R.F.U. executive last night, the Tigers and Argonaut second teams will not be allowed in the O.R.F.U. senior series, being placed in the intermediate ranks. Peterborough and the Toronto Victorias will play out the western senior series themselves. Joe Hay, secretary of the O.R.F.U., was the sorehead who was responsible for this absurd action. The Tiger O.R.F.U., team will be just as good as the best the Vics and Peterborough can place in the field, and the only reason for the O.R.F.U.'s action was Joe Hay's animosity to the Tigers, developed so strongly since the Interprovincial Union went through.

As a matter of fact, the Tigers have sent in a protest about the meeting. The Tigers were not officially notified of the meeting, and had no representative present, the affair having been cut and dried. A two-club senior series is a farce, and the Tigers expect to play senior yet. There is enough material here for four teams, but the Tigers want to enter only senior and junior teams.

The Tigers think that there was irregularity in connection with the meeting, and the fact that Secretary Hay failed to notify them is good evidence of what he wanted to do.

Hamilton Herald; What is the O.R.F.U. coming to? At a meeting held last night, of which the Tigers were not notified, the senior series was reorganized and Hamilton and Argonauts were set back to the intermediate ranks, leaving Peterborough and Victorias to play in the western district. This move was made without the local club being consulted, and as a result there is going to be some doings in football circles within the next few days. The Tigers, by winning the intermediate championship last year, earned the right to play senior this year and, have a team that is quite capable of giving either Victorias or Peterborough a good game. If the Tigers' best team was to remain in the O.R.F.U., it would simply be a case of one season, which would prove very unsatisfactory to both the players and public. The Tiger intermediates would give the other teams a better chance and would make the series more evenly balanced. The matter is by no means settled yet, and it is either a case of senior football for the locals or none at all.

The O.R.F.U. appears to have a one-man executive.

There are lots of things that Joe Hay thinks about the new union that don't appear in print.

The senior O.R.F.U. without the Tigers will be like a school without a teacher.

The only way they can keep the senior O.R.F.U. honors from Hamilton is to shut out the team.

The local rugby players had a splendid two hours' work out Saturday afternoon.

Montreal defeated the Argonauts on Saturday by 17 to 8.

Police Court

A special session of the police court was held at four p.m. Saturday when a recent arrival from Scotland when John Quinn was charged with having broken a window in the American Hotel the information having been laid by Mr. Flynn the proprietor. Mr. Flynn noted that the damages amounted to $2 Quinn who had evidences of a recent jag, his left eyebrow being broken, pleaded guilty. The magistrate imposed a penalty of $4 with the alternative of going to jail for 15 days. In default of the coin, the Scotsman took the 15 days. He then pleaded guilty to having been drunk and disorderly in a public place. He was fined $2 on this charge with $4.60 costs or 15 days in jail. He took the 15 days which were made to run concurrently with the former sentence.

The magistrate remarked, "Irishmen who come from Ireland are bad enough but God save us from Irishmen who come from Scotland."

Quinn who is a young man has served three years in the British Royal Navy. He was on the steamship Dreadnaught and Revenge and was attached to the channel squadron.

The case of the Ontario Coal Co. charged with the violation of the sign by-law which was enlarged from last week was disposed of yesterday. The company have complied with the conditions of the by-law as far as raising sign in question and bringing it within 18 inches of the brick wall, and the magistrate dismissed the charge. This was the only matter that the magistrate had to deal with at yesterday's police court. He however assessed the company $3.35 for costs of the court, remarking, "You know chief, we are not running this court for fun or for the good of our health. This company must pay the damages. But say, chief, if they don't pay the costs, whom are we going to send to jail in default?" "Well," replied Chief Roszel, "the information was made out against the Ontario Coal Co., so I guess, if the costs are not paid, we will have to send the members up on the hill.

Mother and Son Found Dead in the Barn

Albany, Oct. 4.—Believing that he can throw some light on the double murder committed at Londonville on the outskirts of Albany, the police of various places in this vicinity searched for hours yesterday for trace of Jacob Beeche, a farm hand. But up to midnight had not located him. The search began yesterday directly after the discovery of the body of Mrs. Katherine Dargatz, wife of John A. Dargatz, a farmer, and their nine-year-old adopted son. The woman was bound about the neck and arms with ropes, her body suspending from a rafter in the barn in the rear of her home. Nearby was the body of her son, lying in a pool of blood, his skull being crushed in with an axe. John A. Dargatz, husband of the woman, was taken into custody, and will be held for the present at least.

The clothes of Beache were found in his room. His trunk was found late in the hayloft of the barn, concealed under a large quantity of hay.

JAPANESE GOVERNMENT WILL NOT CONSENT TO RESTRICTION

Will Not Agree to Limit Immigration to Canada--Must Observe the Recent Treaty--Many Orientals Come

Tokio, Oct. 6. — With reference to telegrams reporting that a Canadian commission is coming to Japan to negotiate for restriction of Japanese immigrants to Canada, it was reiterated here on trustworthy authority that the Japanese Government will not consent to any restriction, inasmuch as immigration may be restricted when the government considers it necessary without any formal agreement, which is regarded here as contravention of the Anglo-Japanese commercial treaty. Moreover the Japanese consul-general at Honolulu reports that the bulk of Japanese immigrants, who desired to transmigrate to Canada, have already left Hawaii, and that not many more are expected to invade Canada.

MANY ORIENTALS COME.

Vancouver, Oct. 6.—It is reported here that the steamer Tinga Maru, from Japan, is due in Victoria with 280 Japs and 70 Chinamen aboard. The steamer was held at Shanghai three days on account of the cholera scare. The steamer Tartar, due at Victoria tomorrow, brings 100 Japs and 500 Hindoos. The Blue funnel liner Titan and steamer Tremont are coming with 300 Japs between them.

The grand jury, considering the riot cases yesterday, found seven true bills and six no bills. Two true bills had been already found. Four cases yet remain to be considered. The cases will be heard next week.

Claim Big Preference in the York County Loan Assets

Toronto, Oct. 6.—Shall the Nova Scotia shareholders of the York County Loan and Savings Company be placed in the "creditors" class and receive a big preference in the distribution of the assets?

This was the question placed officially before Mr. George Kappelle, the court's appointed referee, at noon yesterday, by Mr. C. A. Master, counsel for the Bluenoses among the York County shareholders. His contention, generally speaking was to the effect that the directors of the York County had no legal right to sell shares in Nova Scotia without the sanction of the Nova Scotian Legislature, because shares were sold to people of that province, he says, they are entitled to rank as firm-claim oreditors.

ONTARIO WILL RESIST.

As the Nova Scotia shareholders number four or five thousand and hold half a million in shares— or "claims," as they desire to call them—if they were let in on the ground floor as creditors, the shareholders in Ontario and other provinces would suffer considerably, and their money receive a much larger discount. Consequently, Mr. Masten's application will be fought vigorously by Mr. W. M. Douglas, K.C., representing the other shareholders, and Mr. Alex. Macgregor, for the National Trust Co., liquidators of the estate. If the referee decides in favor of the Nova Scotians, which is thought unlikely, there will probably be an appeal at Osgoode Hall.

ARRANGING DETAILS.

Yesterday the preliminaries for taking the evidence for the Nova Scotians were arranged.

"We cannot admit," said Mr. Douglas, "that the company had no license to get business in Nova Scotia."

There was some talking about having to go to the Maritime Provinces to get evidence.

"Of course," said Mr. Kappele "none of us want to go way down there if we can help it."

Mr. Masten wanted it understood, that his retainer to speak for Nova Scotia shareholders covered other provinces, where the shareholders might think they were "preference" shareholders, because the acceptance of their money was unlicensed.

Does a Coal Combine Exist in Peterboro?

(To the Editor of The Times.)

Dear Sir.—An evening contemporary devotes a long article to the query, "Does a Coal Combine Exist here?" Why how absurd to accuse people like this! It is only a singular and altogether undesigned coincidence that every now and then local prices are raised on the same day and to exactly the same prices and the same conditions imposed. That no one dealer of the many here lowers the price of coal on his own account, as do dealers in every other commodity is just an accident. The further fact that Peterborough has to pay exhorbitant prices for coal is simply a patriotic move of these independent dealers to demonstrate to the world that Peterborough is prosperous and her citizens have literally "Money to burn!" To demonstrate that there is no such hold up here as a coal combine, the proper authorities should at once investigate the matter thoroughly so that those "unpatriotic" enough to kick over this system of showing Peterborough's plethora of wealth can get the matter settled effectually, and it is to be hoped that a sure and true revelation of existing coal conditions here will be ascertained. Should this be attained there would not be much more talk about this "combine." I see in the evening paper referred to, appear five advertisements, by as many different coal companies in the same column, showing the coincidence of simultaneous raise of price. Surely if there was as hard and fast a combine as thought by some people to exist here, five firms could save four-fifths of the cost of advertising by inserting only one adv. for all. Possibly this is a confirmation of the suggested desire to show that Peterborough has money to burn however. Anyway, even if there were a coal combine what right have people to kick when no investigation is undertaken?

Yours truly,
SUBSCRIBER.

Indians Holding Their Own

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 5.—Inspector C. H. West, formerly of Regina, is in the city from Lesser Slave Lake, where he has been stationed for the last seven years. Speaking of his work among the Indians, Dr. West stated that he had charge of the Beaver Indians, Crees Chippewyans, Slavers, and other tribes. The Indians were just about holding their own in point of numbers, the deaths each year being about equal to the births.

Speaking of the country in the Slave Lake and Peace River district, Inspector West grew enthusiastic. He thought the Peace River country would be opened and settled before the Saskatchewan country. The crops in part of Alberta were excellent this year, and were harvested before the frost.

PETERBOROUGH, OCTOBER 7, 1907.

A SPLENDID RECORD

It is a common thing to hear Canada described as backward and stupid by a certain class of people across the line, but the fact remains, that our big neighbor in the south fully realizes by actual test what we possess in men and in the spirit of useful invention.

There was the telephone and the subsequent development of the telegraph wire. Now two other inventions by Canadians, recent and valuable beyond computation, must be put to their credit. The first, the automatic telephone, doing away with the exchange which has acted as a more or less unwelcome intermediary between speakers, by which the user gets into communication with the other subscriber himself and knows whether they answer or not, whether the line is busy or not, and with less delay.

The next is as yet comparatively little known, viz., the electrical ore finder, by which the mineral wealth for a distance of 25 feet down can be ascertained with certainty.

This latter invention is the product of a Cobalt man and was instantly bought by a South Cobalt miner and used in the location of a large number of veins proving it to be a valuable.

[illegible] of Canada of [illegible] country in [illegible] will be proud, and in which Canada stands unexcelled.

OLD ENGLAND'S WORLD RECORD

We are prone to think Old England rests upon its old things. At some recent demonstrations in motor-harvesting [illegible] an opportunity to display a different conclusion. An acre of standing corn was mowed on the farm, threshed and ground on the mobile power of an agricultural tractor, working with its own engine. An acre of ground was also ploughed, furrowed, drilled, harrowed and sown with new crop within seven hours and a half. This constitutes a world's record, and it is so much more to the credit of the country that only the tractor, but also the threshing drum, mill, cultivator, drill and harrow were all British. The harvesting machine hailed from Canada, so that the record is therefore an imperial one.

Great Britain has found its interest in the Suez Canal to be a paying investment. It purchased Egypt's monopoly interest [illegible] ago for the sum of $20,000,000, which produces annual dividends amounting to about $5,000,000. The French company that constructed the canal still retains financial control. On the governing board the French have 22 members, the British shareholders 7 members and the British government 3 members.

CUT THEM ALL OUT.

The Enemies One Is Likely to Meet In His Vocabulary.

"In the dictionary of fools we find 'I can't' very often, plenty of 'ifs' and lots of words like 'luck' and 'destiny' and phrases like 'If I only had time or a chance like other people!'"

Did you ever think that many of the words and phrases which you constantly use are your real enemies, that they leave their hideous pictures and black shadows in your mind?

How many times have you been kept from doing a good deed by such phrases as "Oh, I can't do that," "I am afraid that that will not turn out well." "Oh, I know I can't do that," "Somebody else can do that a great deal better," "I am afraid to try," "I haven't the courage," "I fear I shall take cold or catch some disease if I do this or that?"

I believe that those two words, "I can't," have ruined more prospects and have kept more ability doing the work of mediocrity than any other two words in our language.

"I am afraid of this or that" is a terrible hinderer, a terrible blighter of ambition, a cooler of enthusiasm.

All achievement and all efficiency depend upon initiative, and that is easily killed by the fear words, the words which express doubt and uncertainty.

"By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—Success.

VALUE OF WALKING.

Benefits to Be Derived From This Form of Exercise.

There is hardly an instance of a long lived man who has not been for the best part of his life a brisk walker and for some reason or other has had to take exercise pretty well every day.

Riding is all very well and so are other exercises, but there is nothing like a good walk, because it stimulates the blood and the muscles and necessitates being in the open air.

If those who complain of being stout would only think of this and never omit a daily constitutional they would be amply rewarded. It will keep them young and their figures presentable.

It is simply a remedy that no one needs to. Sitting about in the open air is all very well and is far better than sitting in the house, but it does not keep you in good health.

It is quite another thing to overfatigue oneself. There is nothing better than to get into a healthy perspiration by walking. It is just like drinking a glass of cold water in the morning. It is so simple no one believes in it.

This may not suit everybody, but those it does suit it will keep in health.

Help the Editor.

An Oklahoma editor puts forth this plea: "My friend, help the editor in his wide eyed search for news. When your friends come to you, if you are not ashamed of it, tell him; when your wife gives a tea party, if you will have recovered from the effects of the gossip, drop in with the news; when a baby arrives fill your pockets with cigars and call; if you go to a party, steal some of the good things and leave 'em with the item in our sanctum. If your wife licks you, come in and let us see your scars and tender sympathy through the paper. If your mother-in-law has died, don't be bashful about it; give in all the commonplace news. In short, whatever makes you feel proud, sad, lonesome or glad submit it to our twenty-four carat wisdom and see our matted lock part and stand up on end with gratitude, which will pour from every pore with moisture from a dew besprinkled earth."

The Bird Got Wise.

A gentleman by way of a joke placed a golf ball in the nest of his ancient parrot. Polly sat with exemplary patience on her novel egg and appeared pretty nearly heartbroken when the weeks went by and she found herself unrewarded. At last she could stand it no longer. A terrible screeching brought her owner downstairs at 4 o'clock in the morning.

"What's the matter, Polly?" he asked as he noticed that the bird's beak was chipped through trying to get at the interior.

"Matter!" screetched Polly. "Great Scott, I'm bunkered!"—London Telegraph.

Pedestrian Rights.

Only in Great Britain, so far as I know, does the law hold that a foot passenger has an equal right to the highway with the wheeled traffic and that it is the duty of the driver of the latter to avoid at all costs the former, even if he has to do so at considerable inconvenience and often danger. In other countries, on the contrary, it is the duty of the pedestrian to give way to the wheeled traffic.

Poor Old Sol!

An astronomer says that an enormous dark planet is rushing toward the sun and that the impact, which is to take place in a few thousand years, will be frightful. Great Caesar! If that's the case, Old Sol stands a good chance of having the spots knocked out of him.

What Ma Said.

Little Girl (to lady visitor)—Please, Miss Jawerer, let me see your tongue. Miss J. (surprised)—Why, my dear? Little Girl—Why, ma said you'd no end of a tongue.—London Sketch.

We never enjoy perfect happiness. Our most fortunate successes are mingled with sadness. Some anxieties always perplex the reality of our satisfaction.—Corneille.

The Story of a Rifle Shot.

Perhaps no one knows, or ever will know, how much in the Spanish-American war a single rifle ball accomplished toward bringing the conflict to an early close. It was a sergeant of the Ninth infantry who fired the shot, at a distance of more than 1,500 yards, that nearly severed the left arm of General Linares from his body and gave the supreme command at Santiago to General Toral. Sergeant McInarney was the most advanced soldier of the American forces, and took position in a tree. Beyond, within the breastworks, he noticed an officer upon a gray horse, apparently making an inspection of the entire line. Though the order had gone out that day that no firing should be indulged in, McInarney drew a bead upon the horseman and brought him down. Later it was learned that the sergeant's target was General Linares, regarded as the best of Spain's fighters in Cuba. Toral, a commander who was anxious for a speedy termination of hostilities, assumed command, and a few hours later Santiago capitulated to the Americans.—New York Tribune.

"All Hands Abandon Ship!"

A naval officer thus describes the realistic "All hands abandon ship" drill: "Two minutes after the word has been passed every ship's boat has swung from its davits into the water, and a minute later every boat is thoroughly provisioned and watered. Within four minutes and often in much quicker time every man of the ship's company, from the commanding officer down, is occupying the station in the boat called for by his ship's number, and then the command 'Sheer off' is given. The boats are hauled away a couple of hundred feet from the deserted vessel, and she rides without a human soul aboard her, often when the drill is gone through in midocean, in a sea that the landsman would account terrific. Then the word 'Board!' is passed, and within eight minutes at the most all hands are not only on board again, but every boat has been relashed to the davits, all of the provisions, water, instruments and other gear have been removed, and the ship's company is in a fair way to get to sleep again."

Origin of "Hello, Bill!"

Why do the Elks yell "Hello, Bill!" It's this way: Back in 1894, when there was a schism in the organization, the two factions met in Atlantic City for a peace parley. At the time William G. Myers of this city, Philadelphia's only past grand exalted ruler, was the grand esteemed leading knight and one of the most popular men in the order. To get his advice and greet him hundreds of Elks congregated at the Atlantic City station to meet Mr. Myers. All the members were at high tension. When Bill Myers stepped off the car Delegate Stack of St. Paul, a big six footer, shouted, "Hello, Bill!" and the crowd took up the salutation with a hearty laugh, and from that day to this "Hello, Bill!" is so universally used among Elks that it has virtually become official. To the good natured feeling which had its outward expression in Stack's greeting to Bill Myers is ascribed the reconciliation.—Philadelphia Press.

The Last Cigar in the Box.

"The last cigar in the box is the hardest to sell," was the remark of a Front street dealer. "Not because it is not as good as any other cigar, but because of the superstition of the average man against taking the last of anything. As a result we often take one cigar, or even two cigars, of the last cigars in a box and put them on top of the cigars in a full or almost full box. On the other hand, I ought to mention that there are men who prefer the last cigars and who ask us to save the last cigars in the boxes for them every day, sometimes to the number of six or seven daily, for which they call every evening. We have thus no trouble in disposing of these last cigars, but the contrast in the conduct of the two styles of customers is curious."—Philadelphia Record.

My Symphony.

To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable, and wealthy, not rich; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently, act frankly, to listen to stars and birds, babes and sages with open heart; to bear all cheerfully, do all bravely, await occasions, hurry never. In a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious grow up through the common. This is to be my symphony.—William Henry Channing.

A Sea Story.

The good ship Fair Wind was bowling along before the nor'west trade. The captain was in the galley peeling potatoes for the men's dinner; the mate was swabbing down the poop; the cook was shooting the sun and the apprentices were merrily shooting holes in the skylight with chunks of plum duff.

"There she blows!" cried the man in the crow's nest.

Instantly all was excitement.

"Three what blows?" yelled the skipper.

"The wind," answered the lookout, with a hoarse laugh.

The captain burst into foam.

"Kidded aboard my own ship," he wept, but his tears were interrupted by a wild yell from the forecastle.

"Land ho!"

"Whereaway?" cried the skipper.

"At the bottom." A sneering laugh from the hands.

"Fooled again," said the captain tearfully. And with a plunge over the side he was gone.—New York American.

So Called Intelligence in Animals.

Now the so called intelligence of the lower animals is largely like that of the rills that find their way to the sea, or of the seeds of the plants that find their proper habitat. Marsh plants find their way to the marshes, hill plants find their way to the hills. The spores of the black knot seem to hunt out every plum tree in the land. The rats and the mice find their way to your new house or new barn because they are constantly on the search for new fields. The squirrels find the acorn grove and the birds the cherry trees for the same reason. Their necessities for food send them in all directions till they hit the right spots. I cleared off a swamp in the woods and put a ditch through it; in two or three years the cattail flag was growing in my ditch. These winged seeds from distant swamps traversed the air in all directions, and when the wind dropped them on the proper soil they took root and throve; all others—vastly the greater number—came to naught.—John Burroughs in Atlantic.

The Fatal Snapshot.

Now, if you have never resided a minute or jigger, as we generally call it, on a small boat running off under a press of sail in a seaway, you have never done an acrobatic stunt that knocks out the most thrilling feats of the arena. It is just as bad as laying out on the bowsprit to shift a jib, because the wet is left out, and therefore it is a job not so detested by seamen. Working on the bowsprit is most dreaded of all sea jobs. More men lose their lives off that spar than from all other parts of the ship together. Driving along she takes a plunge into it, at the same time the heavy foot of the sail bangs across, knocking off your hold, and overboard you go to be swept under and trodden upon by the swift rushing forefoot. A dark night on a jib boom with a half mutinied sail storming about and the spar end plunging, bucking and forking the brine at every plunge—there may be nastier places; if so, they have never crossed my hawse.—T. F. Day in Outing Magazine.

The Inspiring "Rebel Yell."

To know truly what the "rebel yell" was one must have heard it with the din and the roar of the rifles and the thunder of the artillery; with the shrieks of the wounded and the groans of the dying; must have seen mother earth being discolored with the rich blood of valorous men. "When Greek joined Greeks, then was the tug of war;" when Americans met Americans, it was then the "rebel yell" was given birth. It was a thing to inspire brave men to action, to give resolution strength; to the coward it was a consuming terror. The man who could stand unbalanced in the face of the real "rebel yell" in the days of its strength may justly lay claim to a courage that knows no faltering.—Knoxville Journal.

Carlyle's Recognizances.

Joachim, the great violinist, was introduced to Carlyle by a mutual friend. The sage was about to take his morning walk, and he asked Joachim to accompany him. During a very long walk in Hyde park Carlyle kept the conversation running on Germany and its great men—the Fredericks, Moltke and Bismarck—until at last Joachim thought it was his turn to take a lead, and he started with the inquiry, "Do you know Sharndale Bennett?"

"No," was the reply, and, after a pause, "I don't care generally for musicians; they are an empty, wind baggy sort of people."

First Run on a Bank.

The first "run" on banking institutions in London was in 1667. Many Lombard street goldsmiths and bankers had lent out the money intrusted to them and, being called upon for payment, were unable to meet the demand. A crowd of creditors and others assembled, and a riot followed, in which four bankers were hanged at their own doors before order could be restored and the angry creditors persuaded that they were not being swindled.

Lots of Degrees.

First Professor—That man has been signally honored by many colleges. Second Professor—I should say so. He has been given enough degrees to qualify him for a first class thermometer.—Milwaukee Journal.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet; while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crossed 50 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. There is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000 - PAR VALUE $1.

On to Willow Creek!

Recent discoveries at Willow Creek, in the Greenwater Copper region, have caused a rush of excited miners. The Baltic strike and other explorations of neighboring ground are unquestionably authentic. We have identically the same indications on our Providence group, located near the mouth of Willow Creek. Water is plentiful but transportation hitherto has been difficult. Now the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad has extended into Death Valley, and Willow Creek is attracting capital, and the town of that name contains a thousand souls.

THE GUGGENHEIM-GREENWATER COPPER COMPANY

has had a chance to sell its Willow Creek property for much more than it paid for it; but the Company resolved to hold it and make a mine. The company is now selling stock at TEN cents a share. We have a little left which we can let you have

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

"Guy," and the doctor came closely to him, whispering huskily, "you and I are murderers in the first degree. Yes; and both deserve to be hung. Do you remember that Madeline Clyde whom you insulted with your logic and Latin verbs? She'd set her heart on that certificate. She wanted the money, not for new gowns and fooleries, mind, but to help her old grandfather pay his debts. His place is mortgaged. I don't understand it; but he asked some old hunks to lend him the money, and the miserly rascal, whoever he was, refused. I wish I had it. I'd give it to him out and out. But that's nothing to do with the girl—Maddy, they call her. The disappointment killed her, and she is dying—is raving crazy—and keeps talking of that confounded examination. I tell you, Guy, my inward parts get terribly mixed up when I hear her talk, and my heart thumps like a trip-hammer. That's the reason I have not been up to Aikenside. I wouldn't leave Maddy so long as there was hope. I did not tell them this morning. I couldn't make that poor couple feel worse than they are feeling; but when I looked at her tossing from side to side and picking at the bedclothes, I knew it would soon be over—that when I saw her again the poor little arms would be still enough and the bright eyes shut forever. Guy, I couldn't see her die—I don't like to see anybody die, but her, Maddy, of all others—and so I came away. If you stay long enough, you'll hear the bell toll, I reckon. There is none at Honedale Church, which they attend. They are Episcopalians, you see, and so they'll come up here may be. I hope I shall be deafer than an adder."

Here the doctor stopped, wholly out of breath, while Guy for a moment sat without speaking a single word. Jessie, in his hearing, had told her mother what the sick girl in the doctor's office had said about being poor and wanting the money for grandpa, while Mrs. Noah had given him a rather exaggerated account of Mr. Markham's visit; but he had not associated the two together until now, when he saw the whole, and almost as much as the doctor himself regretted the part he had had in Maddy's illness and her grandfather's distress.

"Doc," he said, laying his hand on the doctor's arm, "I am that old hunks, the miserly rascal who refused the money. I met the old man going home that day, and he asked me for help. You say the place must be sold. It never shall, never. I'll see to that, and you must save the girl."

"I can't, Guy. I've done all I can, and now, if she lives, it will be wholly owing to the prayers that old saint of a grandfather says for her. I never thought much of these things until I heard him pray; not that she should live anyway, but that, if it were right, Maddy might not die. Guy, there's something in such a prayer as that. It's more powerful than all my medicine swallowed at one grand gulp."

Guy didn't know very much about praying then, and so he did not respond, but he thought of Lucy Athestone, whose life was one hymn of prayer and praise, and he wished she could know of Maddy, and join her petitions with those of the grandfather. Starting suddenly from his chair, he exclaimed, "I am going down there. It will look queerly, too, to go alone. Ah, I have it! I'll drive back to Aikenside for Jessie, who has talked so much of the girl that her lady mother, forgetting that she was once a teacher, is disgusted. Yes, I'll take Jessie with me, but you must order it; you must say it is good for her to ride, and, Hal, give me some medicine for her, just to quiet Agnes, no matter what, provided it's not strychnine."

Contrary to Guy's expectations, Agnes did not refuse to let Jessie go for a ride, particularly as she had no suspicion where he intended taking her, and the little girl was soon seated by her brother's side, chatting merrily of the different things they passed upon the road. But when Guy told her where they were going, and why they were going there, the tears came at once into her eyes, and hiding her face in Guy's lap, she sobbed bitterly.

"I did like her so much that day," she said, "and she looked so sorry, too. It's terrible to die!"

Then she plied Guy with questions concerning Maddy's probable future. "Would she go to heaven, sure?" and when Guy answered at random, "Yes," she asked, "How did he know? Had he heard that Maddy was that kind of good which lets folks in heaven? Because, Brother Guy," and the little preacher nestled closely to the young man, fingering his coat buttons as she talked, "because, Brother Guy, folks can be good—that is, not do naughty things—and still God won't love them unless they—I don't know what, I wish I did."

Guy drew her nearer to him, but to that childish yearning for knowledge he could not respond, so he said:

"Who taught you all this, little one?—not your mother, surely."

"No, not mamma, but Miriam, the waiting-maid we left in Boston. She told me about it, and taught me to pray different from mamma. Do you pray, Brother Guy?"

The question startled the young man, who was glad his coachman spoke to him just then, asking if he should drive through Devonshire village, or go direct to Honedale by a shorter route.

They would go to the village, Guy said, hoping that thus the doctor might be persuaded to accompany them. This diverted Jessie's mind, and she said no more of praying; but the first tiny grain was sown, the mustard seed, which should hereafter spring up into a mighty tree, the indirect result of Maddy's disappointment and almost fatal illness. They found the doctor at home and willing to go with them. Indeed, so unnerved had he become listening for the first stroke of the bell which was to herald the death he deemed so sure, that he was on the point of mounting his horse and galloping off alone, when Guy's invitation came. It was five miles from Devonshire to Honedale, and when they reached a hill which lay half-way between, they stopped for a few minutes to rest the tired horses. Suddenly, as they sat waiting, a sharp, ringing sound fell on their ears, and grasping Guy's knee, the doctor said, "I told you so; Madeline Clyde is dead."

It was the village bell, and its twice three strokes betokened that it tolled for somebody youthful, some body young, like Maddy Clyde. Jessie wept silently, but there were no tears in the eyes of the young men, as with beating hearts they sat listening to the slow, solemn sounds which came echoing up the hill. There was a pause; the sexton's dirgelike task was done, and now it only remained for him to strike the age, and tell how many years the departed one had numbered.

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten." Jessie counted it aloud, while every stroke fell like a heavy blow upon the hearts of the young men, who a few weeks ago knew not that such as Maddy Clyde had ever had existence.

How long it seemed before another stroke, and Guy was beginning to hope they'd heard the last, when again the dull, muffled sound came floating on the air, and Dr. Holbrook's black, bearded lip half quivered as he now counted aloud, "One, two, three, four, five."

That was all; there it stopped; and vain were all their listenings to catch another note. Fifteen years and only fifteen had passed over the form now forever still.

"She was fifteen," Guy whispered remembering distinctly to have heard that number from Maddy herself.

"I thought they told me fourteen; but of course it's she," the doctor rejoined. "Poor child, I would have given much to have saved her."

Knew Him Too Well.

The late President Chester A. Arthur, although he was a man of warm friendships, had a high sense of personal dignity that would brook no undue familiarities. A lifelong friend of Mr. Arthur, who had accompanied him on one of his hunting trips, was telling an acquaintance some of the incidents of the hunt.

"I know it's the general impression," he said, "that Mr. Arthur is a cold, self centered sort of man, but it isn't true. He is one of the most genial and companionable of men when you become well acquainted with him. I thought I already knew him pretty well, but I came to understand him better while on that trip than ever before."

"I suppose you know him well enough now to call him by his first name," ventured the other.

"On the contrary," was the rejoinder, "I know him well enough not to call him by his first name."

Desert Plants.

Plants of the desert, as a rule, possess few leaves, the cactus, for instance, being mostly spines. There is a very good reason for the lack of leaves in desert plants. The object is to check the transferation of moisture by offering as small a surface as possible to the dry air. For the same reason the roots of desert plants usually run deep into the soil so that they can suck up all the available moisture. In some instances the leaves assume a vertical position and thus avoid the direct rays of the burning desert sun. On the other hand, the leaves of trees in very wet countries are provided with points such as the maple from which the rain drops off. Were the leaves flatter the rain would collect and make them rot.

A Surprise.

A cook at a cheap boarding house played a little game on a grumbling boarder by serving him with a piece of sole leather instead of beefsteak.

"You've changed your butcher, Mrs. Hascher?" said the boarder, looking up at the landlady after sawing two or three minutes at the leather.

"Same butcher as usual," replied the boarding mistress, with a patronizing smile. "Why?"

"Oh, nothing much," said the boarder, trying to make an impression on the steak with his knife and fork, "only this piece of meat is the tenderest I have had in this house for some weeks."—Strand Magazine.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nerves of excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

Strawberry Ambrosia.

To make strawberry ambrosia, select fine, rich flavored berries and arrange them in a deep glass dish with alternate layers of coarsely chopped pineapple, sprinkling between each layer a generous dusting of powdered sugar and fresh grated cocoanut. Pour over the top a cupful of orange juice and set in a cold place until thoroughly chilled, then serve.

To Ebonize.

Picture frames, chairs and other furniture may be ebonized by washing them four times, thoroughly drying between times, in a boiling mixture of strong logwood and water. Then wash the wood in a solution of acetate of iron, which is a mixture of iron filings and vinegar.

A Naval Prediction.

The chief constructor of the French navy is quoted as saying that he is convinced that the battleship and armored cruiser must before long be merged into a single type, the battle cruiser. This resultant concentration of great attack and defense with extreme speed will, he believes, be found illustrated, say, in 1915, in a vessel of 25,000 tons, mounting a unit battery of high caliber guns and developing a speed of not less than 22 knots. The French constructor is also persuaded that any navy now bold enough to lay down battleships of 25,000 tons displacement will by one stroke secure a tremendous advantage over all its rivals, because a squadron of four such vessels will greatly outclass six battleships less effective in the energies that can be assembled.—Engineer.

The Biggest Horse.

Nebraska Queen, the largest mare on earth, is a product of the breeding farm of S. E. Sparks at Falls City, Neb. Mr. Sparks is to the horse world what Burbank, the noted Californian is to the world of vegetables and fruit. It is his purpose to make two big horses grow where one little one grew before, and he is doing it. He has raised a number of large horses but none so large and perfect as Nebraska Queen. She is 20½ hands high eleven feet eight inches in girth, thirty-two inches length of head, nine feet three inches in girth, forty-two inches shoulder, twenty inch throat, eighty inch collar and weighs over 2,500 pounds. She is perfect in every proportion, kind, gentle and intelligent of beautiful color and is truly a model horse.—Kansas City Journal.

A Losing Game.

Two ice cream venders were fined at Tower bridge police court yesterday for gambling with their customers. It was stated that a coin was spun, and if the vender guessed correctly he got the money and gave no ice cream. If he lost, he gave the winner a penny's worth of ice cream and a halfpenny. The advantage seems to us to be too much with the customer. It is worth paying more than a penny to get out of having east end ice cream.—London Globe.

Manila Hemp.

Manila hemp is the most valuable cordage fiber in the world. Apparently it cannot be grown successfully anywhere else. The plant looks exactly like a banana plant. The mode of stripping hemp is still very crude. The invention of a successful machine would increase the production enormously. Last year's exports were valued at $19,612,632.

This company owns 160 acres (80 acres) of some of the best proven mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zon group in the Diamondfield section, second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The Uncertainty of Things.

This is the great misfortune of life—that it is changeable and never remains in the same state. "Man," says Job, "that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down. He fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not."

What is more changeable? We are told that the chameleon assumes in an hour many colors. The sea of the Euripus has an evil name for its many changes, and the moon takes every day its own peculiar form. But what is all this compared to the changes of man? What Proteus ever assumed so many different forms as man does every hour? Now sick, now in health; now content, now discontent; now sad, now joyous; now timid, now hopeful; now suspicious, now credulous; now peaceful, now recalcitrant; now he wishes, now he wishes not, and many times he knows not what he wants. In short, the changes are as numerous as the accidents in an hour, so that every one of them turns him upside down. The past gives him pain, the present disturbs him, and the future causes him agony.—Luis de Granada.

Bathless Rural England.

Actual facts upset many a scientific theory. Theoretically, nine-tenths of the rural population ought not to attain maturity; as in fact, they are the longest lived community in the empire. We ought to vary our diet, and, if not sworn vegetarians, take so much meat to so much vegetables and the rest. But the countryman does not take meat—or hardly ever. He cannot afford it. His wages are higher than his father's were, but then, meat is proportionately costlier than was formerly the case. He is for the most part a vegetable feeder. He should frequently bathe, but he does not bathe at all. "How is it, then, that these men live so long and so rarely experience illness?" one of the kind was asked the other day. "Well, you see, sir," was the answer, "we don't need no baths. In the summer we sweats so at our work that that serves for all the year round!" Rural England does not bathe. Colliery England and chimney sweeping England do.—St. James' Gazette.

Chicken, Creole Style.

Doesn't this suggestion in the Ladies' World for chicken, creole style, sound good?

Wash one-half pint of rice in cold water until no more of the flour discolors the water; then place the rice in a quart of boiling chicken or veal stock and cook until it is tender; season with salt and white pepper. Drain out the rice and pack it into a buttered ring mold; then invert on a hot dish and let the ridg slip out. In the meantime have cooked chicken cut into small pieces and reheated in a tomato puree, seasoned with browned onion, to which add one green pepper cut into small pieces after the seeds are removed. Season with pepper if liked quite hot, salt and butter and fill the center of the rice ring. For a company meal the green pepper can be omitted, and two canned red Spanish peppers can be put through the mincer and after heating disposed on top of the chicken when it is placed in the ring. A sprig of parsley should decorate the side of the dish.

Medical Treatment at Night.

Medical treatment almost wholly confined to the daytime is thought by Dr. Lauder, a French physician, to be a serious mistake. Disease is most active at night—asthma, epilepsy and other attacks coming then almost entirely—and observations have shown that medicine administered in the night hours, or both night and day, acts better and with greater effect than an equal dose all given in the daytime. It is explained that in the nocturnal fasting state the body absorbs remedies with greater energy, while they are eliminated less quickly. In many instances disease has resisted medication by day, but has yielded to night treatment.

Same Kind of Cat.

Ethel, aged eight, had succeeded in making her dog stand up on his hind legs, but her efforts to make the cat do likewise resulted in the little girl getting a bad scratch, whereupon she exclaimed, "You d——d cat!"

Her horrified mother, who overheard her, punished her severely, but, not disheartened, Ethel the next morning again endeavored to induce puss to emulate the dog, and again she felt the force of the feline claws. "You"—the angry child began, when her mother said warningly:

"Ethel!"

"Well," she continued, "you are just the same kind of a cat you were yesterday."—Judge.

Willing to Compromise.

During a match at St. Andrew's, Scotland, a rustic was struck in the eye accidentally by a golf ball. Running up to his assailant, he yelled, "This 'll cost ye £5—£5?" "But I called out 'fore' as loudly as I could," explained the golfer. "Did ye, sir?" replied the troubled one, much appeased. "Weel, I didna hear. I'll take fower."

He Knew.

Sportsmen Leave for the Wilds

At an early hour this morning the following Eagle Lake Hunt Club leave for a five weeks' fishing and shooting trip to their shooting-box on that lake, viz., Messrs. William Snowden, Arthur Blade, M. C. Tooley, and Ex-Ald. Stewart of Toronto. They will make the forty-mile drive straight through. Enough baggage and impedi-menta were stored up at the Queen's Hotel on Saturday to supply a small army corps.

Words of Praise

For the several ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's medicines are composed, as given by leaders in all the several schools of medicine, should have far more weight than any amount of non-professional testimonials. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has THE BADGE OF HONESTY on every bottle-wrapper, in a full list of all its ingredients printed in plain English.

If you are an invalid woman and suffer from frequent headache, backache, gnawing distress in stomach, periodical pains, disagreeable, catarrhal, pelvic drain, dragging-down distress in lower abdomen or pelvis, perhaps dark spots or specks dancing before the eyes, faint spells and kindred symptoms caused by female weakness, or other derangement of the feminine organs, you can not do better than take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

The hospital surgeon's knife and operating table may be avoided by the timely use of "Favorite Prescription" in such cases. Thereby the obnoxious examinations and local treatments of the family physician can be avoided and a thorough course of successful treatment carried out in the privacy of the home. THE NEW GOVERNMENT DOCKS WERE OPENED

Prominent Local Citizens Attend and Take Part in the Formal Opening of the Docks--Were Welcomed by the Famers

Yesterday morning at about ten o'clock the good ship Sovereign, carrying some of Peterborough's leading politicians of both the great parties, left the local dock and sped on her way to Hall's Landing. This it might be noted is just across Rice Lake from Gore's Landing, near Cowl stand, but better known as the spot where the Dominion government has recently completed a long needed and gladly welcomed dock to be used for transhipment of freight from Rice Lake and other southern points.

This expedition was naturally under charge of the man to whose strenuous efforts the great recent success of the Trent Valley Canal is due, its able superintendent, Mr. J. H. McClellan

On arrival at Hall's Landing the new dock was formally opened. The following speakers delivering short but pointed remarks, complimentary to the work done by the government at this spot, viz., Messrs. J. H. McClellan, F. Matthews, the reeve of South Monaghan, W. H. Meldrum, Mr. Givens, reeve of Millbrook, Hon. J. R. Stratton, W. Davidson, V. Eastwood, Judge Weller, R. E. Wood, A. P. Poussette, and several of the leading farmers of the neighborhood.

On the way home to Peterborough the steamer called at Hales Bridge, where similar but somewhat shorter ceremonies were observed in connection with the opening of the newd ock there.

Conservative Elected in Brockville

In the Brockville Bye-Election, which took place Yesterday, the Conservative Candidate, Mr. Donovan, was elected by 150 of a Majority over his Opponent, Mr. Lewis, the Liberal Candidate. MR. ROY THORNTON LOST IN THE WOODS

Former Peterborough Boy's Parents Greatly Distressed Over Son's Disappearance--Was Accompanied by Carl Graham.

A remarkable story concerning the disappearance of a former Peterborough boy, Roy Thornton, a son of Mr. Robt. Thornton, a former employe of Adam Hall's establishment, but for some years resident in Winnipeg, is told in a recent issue of the Winnipeg Tribune, which says:—

The relatives and friends of Carl Graham and Roy Thornton of Norwood, are greatly distressed and grieved over the complete disappearance of these two young men from Oak Point, where they have been for the past two weeks on a hunting trip, and grave fears are now held out for their safety.

On inquiry at the home of Carl Graham this morning it was learned that the two young men, cousins, aged 17 and 18 respectively, both of them skilled hunters and of great pluck and determination left their homes on September 16 last, over two weeks ago, to shoot ducks in the vicinity of Oak Point, promising to return in four days or on the following Friday, September 20. The uncle of Carl Graham, Mr. Thomas Graham, is a homesteader at Oak Point, and it was the intention of the boys to proceed to this farm and occupy a small shack on the premises which was partially furnished and contained among other things a small stove for cooking and heating purposes. Besides the other accroutements of a hunting trip, a canoe was taken along, with which to go to and from the marshes at the north end of the lake.

Sufficient food was taken to the camp to last about a week and the boys were in high spirits when they left Winnipeg.

HEAVY FINES IMPOSED AT THE POLICE COURT

A Number of Citizens were Assessed to the Extent of Sixty Dollars Each for Card Playing.

Yesterday afternoon at a special session of the police court, the local ministry was possibly better represented than in many a year past. In the audience, occupying most of the front seats within the bar-encircled sacred quarters, devoted to the press, the lawyers and the witnesses, were the Rev. Messrs. Potter, Langfeldt, Webb, Brace, Coon, Manning, Pearson and Keith.

A number of citizens were charged first with "having played."

Mr. Hatton who appeared for the defendants, noted that the information as made out covered no breach of the law. The information was then amended by Chief Hoezel to comply with the requirements of the statute covering gambling.

Mr. Hatton noted that the seven citizens so charged did play cards and for money. He left the matter entirely in the hands of his worship. However, his clients did not, under the code, come under the classification of gamesters They played poker, but poker is a game of skill. There was no evidence to show that where they played was not a "gaming hall." There was no "rake-off" or "kitty," and no charge was made for the playing. He went on to say that his clients pleaded guilty to avoid publicity although technically, they were guilty.

The magistrate here asked, "How about paying the fines, how long do you want in which to pay these fines?"

Mr. Hatton replied, referring to the money taken when the arrests were made, "I think the chief has enough on his hands now to pay all fines."

"Oh," answered the chief we are expected to confiscate that money and will ask his worship for an order to seize the same."

His worship remarked, "Well, Mr. Hatton, the highest fine for this offence is $100 and the lowest is $20, so, I will split the difference and make it $60 each."

Regarding possible confiscation of the money seized, Mr. Hatton said, "Well, your worship, owing to the very severe penalty you have imposed I think these men have been punished enough"

The magistrate replied, "Well chief, I think you had better keep the money ($113), in the meantime, and I will further consider the matter.

WHENCE THE TROUBLE.

It might be explained that all this trouble arose because Inspector Stewart, in the course of his duty, assisted by P. C. Newhall, entered the hotel at an early hour Sunday morning and proceeded to investigate. They found part of what they sought, namely a poker game in full swing, with cards, cash and liquor on the table in a room on the first floor over the bar. The two officers got busy and first grabbed for exhibit "A," the cards and coin on the tables, where seven citizens were engaged in that old time and most lamentably to those who have played, seductive game of draw poker. The officers captured the cards and about $113 in coin.

The players were brought to the station and let go on their own recognizance. A funny feature about the capture was the ineffectual effort of one of them to hide. It seems that in the room where the game was played was one of those high canopied beds. The man referred to dodged behind the canopy and stood stiff against the adjoining wall, thinking he was hidden from view. Unfortunately his inches exceeded that of the canopy and his hair appeared above the bed extension. One of the officers said, "Say Mr. ——, I recognize your hair, you might as well come out and admit things. He came

COM. OF WHOLE COUNCIL IN SESSION

Owners of Boat Houses will be Taxed a Nominal Rental of 25c. a Year and Yacht Houses $1.00 a Year

The City Council met in Committee of the Whole last night, when there were present; Mayor R. F. McWilliams, and Aldermen Bradburn, Phelan, Duncan, Elliott, McIntyre, Morgan, Johnston and Stevenson.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham wrote stating that, owing to pressure of business, he would not be able to take a trip over the Trent Valley canal route this year.

The mayor pointed out that Mr. Richards, one of the engineers connected with the Hydraulic Power Commission of Toronto, is in town, and will today, with a special committee of the council, make a thorough survey of all the available water power in and contigent to Peterborough.

The opening of Print street, was left in the hands of the Board of Works for investigation. The council will not endorse the opening of any street to a less width than 66 feet.

Ald. Elliott moved, seconded by Ald. Morgan, that Mr. Carveth, contractor of the new fire hall, be rebated one half the $31 paid by him for insurance on carpenters' risk.

The vote was a tie and the mayor voted in the negative.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Elliott,—That Caretaker Wilson be relieved of any duties in the fire hall, and that Wainwright's duties be confined to the fire hall and Board of Works calls, and that the present arrangements of these men and the drivers remain as they are till the end of the year.

Ald. Phelan moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Johnston,—That the duties of Wainwright, Wilson and the fire hall drivers be referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee and Property committee for action; and in the meantime these men to continue their duties as at present.

Ald. Bradburn moved, seconded by Ald. Morgan—That the solicitor be instructed to instruct all people owning canal boat houses on the water front that they must pay the city a nominal rent of 25c. a year, and admit the city's claims to such land.—Carried.

Ald. Phelan's motion that this matter be left in the Property Committees hands was lost.

Subsequently, the committee decided to tax all yacht boat houses $1 a year.

The mayor raised the question of whether it would not be advisable to restrict the 14-inch wall building limits, to the mercantile district, and extend the area demanding 9-inch walls for all buildings. This matter was referred to the Property Committee for consideration.

New York, Oct. 6—A young woman, well dressed, kneeling in the dust of Fourth Avenue last night, administered restoratives to Henry Heine, of 41 St. Mark's Place, who had been knocked down and dragged for sixty feet by a trolley car. Then she tore her handkerchief into strips and bound up the cuts in the man's head, while thousands looked on and cheered. She had been in poor health for some time, and only recently returned from the Chippewa Hospital. In the afternoon, while driving with a lad, she said she wanted a drink in the river. He stopped the team and let her out. As she did not return in a reasonable time, the boy went down to the river bank and discovered her clothing lying there. He could see nothing of the woman. He gave the alarm, and some time afterwards the body was found. The deceased was between forty and fifty years of age, and in comfortable circumstances.

Japanese Ambition Checked in Manchuria

Mukden, Oct. 7.—For two months the persistent demands of Japan for concessions of forests, mines, lands, salt, houses and other things desired, have been stubbornly refused by the Chinese viceroy and governor. In consequence of his ill-success, the Japanese Consul General has been transferred to another port, the struggle in that port being abandoned, though reprisals are threatened. The Chinese conducted the difficult negotiations with great ability, indicating self-confidence and an intelligent perception of political conditions, national rights being recognized and defended without fear.

Great progress has been made in all departments of the Government concerning Manchuria,

The Ex-Ministers for the Senate

Ottawa, Oct. 7.—As the Federal by-elections will be over by October 31st, and Parliament will meet early in November, there is much speculation as to whom the three Ontario Senatorial appointments will be given. Friends of Hon. J. M. Gibson, for years, prominent judicial and forceful as Attorney-General for the Province of Ontario, urge his fitness for the Senate.

Hon. E. Harcourt whose annual budget gave ample proof of the mind of a financier and scholar, and whose career as Minister of Education was marked by brilliancy of speech and wide knowledge, is pressed by admirers to express a wish for a seat in the Upper House.

Hon. John Dryden, the father of agricultural progress, not Only in Ontario, but throughout Canada, whose record as Minister of Agriculture in the Mowat-Hardy-Ross Governments, is a monument to his foresight and the thrift and enterprise of the Ontario farmer, is receiving support from all quarters in the desire of his associates to obtain a seat for him in the Red Chamber.

Make Move to Quiet Macedonia

Vienna Oct. 7.—The Austro-Hungarian and Russian diplomatic representatives at Athens, Belgrade and Sofia have been instructed by their governments to explain to the governments to which they are accredited the true meaning of article III of the Mursteg programme, the arrangement of 1903 by which the Russians put the Balkans in care of Austria-Hungary. The continued incorrect interpretation of this article has been regarded as one of the contributory causes to the present revolutionary activity in the Balkan Peninsula. The explanation will dispel any idea of the creation of national spheres of influence in Macedonia, and will set forth that the delimitation of nationality is to be permitted only in order to facilitate the administrations of the local authorities.

Cholera Does Deadly Work

St. Petersburg, Oct. 7.—The epidemic of cholera which broke out early in August is spreading rapidly, and already twelve provinces are affected. The disease is reported mostly along the Volga, but it has reached Archangel in the north and has made its appearance at Semipalatinsk, Omsk, Tomsk, and Uralsk in Siberia.

The provinces of Kazan, Samara, Saratoff and Nizni-Novgorod are the worst affected. The deaths already run into the thousands. The greatest mortality is in the towns, the doctors in the country finding it easier to effect cures. It is not possible, however, to check the scourge, and every day it is appearing in new provinces.

The Separation Law in Algeria

Paris, Oct. 7.—An administrative decree issued to-day provides for the separation of church and state in Algeria from January 1, 1908. The decree follows closely the terms of the French law on the subject, but allows more latitude in its application, as the government recognizes the great civilizing work done by the missions in that part of Africa. Nevertheless it places Catholics, Protestants, Israelites, and Mussulmans on an equal footing. If cultural associations are formed the Catholics can retain their church property and their clergy will enjoy the benefits of pensions, and so on, just as they could have done in France, but no doubt a entertained by the Vatican will forbid the acceptance of the decree by the Catholics in Algeria, as it did in the case of Catholic in France.

The cost of keeping up the mosques, which the French government assumed at the time of the conquest of Algeria must hereafter be borne by the Mussulmans.

Transfer of Fleet No One's Business

Boston, Mass., October 7.—We have as much right to send our ships to the Pacific at this time as England has to assemble a great fleet in the Mediterranean each year," declared Rear-Admiral Robley D. Evans, in an interview on board his flag-ship, in which he stamped his approval of the policy to send United States warships wherever the navy department thinks best

"The only governments and interests which might possibly have something to gain by war between United States and Japan are agitating this question of such a conflict," he continued. Japan does not want war with the United States. Talk heard to that effect is silly nonsense. They are getting ready for war, but that does not mean they are likely to do anything that will precipitate a conflict with the land or sea forces of this country. Admiral Lord Charles Beresford is now making preparations to go to the North Sea where he will command and manoeuvre a fleet of one hundred vessels. What would the English say if we criticised their plans? They would laugh at us." "You believe, Admiral, that we should have a bigger navy?" He was asked.

"Either build a bigger navy or quit being a world power," he replied.

Port Arthur Wedding of Interest

The bride Miss Mabel Rapsey, who is a sister of Mrs. William Pringle and has visited in the city, while the groom, Mr. Levi Fallis, was formerly employed with the Kingan Hardware Company. Mr. Fallis went to Port Arthur some years ago and has been very successful.

HOUSE NUMBERING.

Ald. Phelan submitted the following;

Gentlemen.—Your Legal Committee beg leave to report as follows;

1. That we referred the claims made by H. A. Hodden, Mrs. Soimes and the Mann Lumber & Cheese Box Co., to the city solicitors;

2. We instructed the city solicitor to prepare a bylaw to prohibit the burning of refuse or waste material in any yard lane, street, etc., within the area bounded by Brock street on the north, Aylmer street on the west, King street on the south, and the easterly limit of lot No. 2, east of Water street on the east we did this on the suggestion of the Fire Underwriters' Association.

3. We received tenders for numbering the houses in the districts which the council decided to have renumbered and after considering the tenders authorizing the chairman to negotiate with the lowest tenderer for putting up illuminium numbers, for which we had received a tender from the Peterborough Hardware Co. There will probably be something over a thousand houses to number or renumber and the cost will be about 25 cents for each.

The report was adopted as read

On motion by Ald. Elliott, seconded by Ald. Duncan, the Board of Works was instructed to take such steps as they think advisable to provide for the surface draining of Benson avenue.

BYLAWS

A bylaw to execute an agreement with Thos. R. Kennedy and the conveyance to him of certain lands, connected with the extension of Aylmer street, passed its several readings.

A bylaw to authorize the construction of a sewer on Bethune street, passed its several readings.

A bylaw to authorize the execution of an agreement with W. J. Koster for the numbering of houses at eight cents per illuminium house number, passed its several readings.

Ald. Phelan moved, seconded by Ald McIntyre,—That the committee be authorized to purchase these illuminating house numbers from the Peterborough Hardware Company. Each set of house numbers will cost about 12 cents.

THE HIGH ASSESSMENT.

Ald. Elliott here wished to distinctly understood that there was no foundation whatever for the popular opinion that the council had instructed the assessors to raise the assessment to the present standard adopted by them. Ald. the aldermen also denied the charge, and agreed that there was nothing to warrant so big a jump.

Ald. McIntyre offered that one citizen had told him Mr. McKee had contended that he had authority for the increase, and had stated that the big jump this year will be the means of reducing the rate next year to 15 mills.

His worship pointed out that Mr. McKee had not received any such authority from the council, but claimed that he was simply acting in strict conformity with the provisions of the new assessment act which demanded that all property be assessed at its actual value.

Ald. Elliott's contention was that the rate should be raised and the assessment reduced, which would bring the taxes of the average citizen down to a more equable basis. An increased number of mills on the dollar would affect the big concerns enjoying fixed assessment to the benefit of the average ratepayer. While he was a strong advocate of fixed assessment for big industries, he thought any increase in taxes commensurate with improved values, should be equally borne by all concerned. For instance, a lower assessment with a higher rate would mean that fixed assessment people would have to bear their proportionate share of the actual increase in taxes with private citizens.

CLEAN POLICE COURT.

An Interesting Event

An unusually interesting event in local athletic circles will be the field day of sports of the Boys' clubs of Knox and All Saints' Church on Saturday. This will give the junior athletes of the city an opportunity to display their prowess. The program for the day has not yet been drawn up, but a committee will have an announcement to make in a few days. It is likely that the events will be pulled off at Nicholls Oval.

No Laborer Need Be Unemployed This Winter

Ottawa, Oct. 7.—There should be no problem of caring for the unemployed during the winter months to solve in Canada year.

Reports received at the office of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission state that the contractors on the various sections of the new railway now under contract intend to vigorously push construction work during the whole winter, and instead of laying off men this fall, they are still anxious to add to the good sized army now at work.

This, taken in conjunction with the fact that reports from all over Canada to the Labor Department show, in almost every line of industry, a continued and pressing scarcity of labor, combined with rising wages, goes to indicate that the flood of immigration to Canada this summer and fall, and the laboring class generally need fear nothing from the usual slackening of the demand for labor during the winter months

On the 550 miles of the National Transcontinental Railway now under contract between Winnipeg and Moncton, it is estimated that over 18,000 men are now at work.

The average wage for ordinary labor is from $2 to $2.25 per day, while experienced or skilled men get from $2.75 to $3 per day. The monthly pay roll on the government section alone is considerably over $1,000,000. On the G.T.P. section of the right from Winnipeg west, and employed generally in railway construction work in the West it is estimated that another army of 20,000 men is engaged.

The lumbering industry, whose comes another very large demand for labor during the winter months, reports to the Labor Department state that wages for shantymen show 15 to 25 per cent increase over last year, and are now at record figures. Winter wages are offered at from $26 to $42 for cooks, cutters, while teamsters, choppers and sawyers are given $25 and general hands $24. Figures are not easily available even at these figures.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Notwithstanding the prophecies of pessimists, there does not appear to be any substantial decrease in the volume of business being transacted the world over, and there are many indications that the money market is becoming easier. The reasons for the financial stringency, of which so much has been said lately, will never be satisfactorily explained, and for the very excellent reason that no one can explain it satisfactorily even to himself. A few weeks ago two English financial writers dealt with the subject. One of them said there was too much money and the other that there was too little. The nearest that we can hope to come to the truth is that the rapid expansion of business, and the consequent enlargements of credits necessarily brought about a period of liquidation, of which speculators in money took advantage and depreciated the value of stocks, which act led to an increased demand for ready money from people, who had to cover loans made upon stocks as collateral. But the cause is not so material as the fact itself that there was a stringency, which shows signs of relaxing. From a more or less careful perusal of a large number of articles dealing with the current condition of the financial world, we are strongly of the opinion that easier money will be the rule from now on. We do not look for any immediate change of pronounced proportions, but we shall be surprised if there is not steady improvement. The stringency is probably one of the few on record that could in some measure be attributed to real estate transactions. There has been for the last two years a determined effort in New York to boom real estate values in that city, and the papers took the matter up with great persistency. The result was that vast sums of money were invested in land, and most of it in part payment for purchases. When the subsequent payments fell due, there was a great scurry to get money to meet them, which made a greater demand upon the resources of the banks than those institutions could meet. While this sort of thing may temporarily derange financial matters, it can have no permanently injurious effect.

THE HARVEST

The chief interest nowadays centers in the harvest. For while Canada's agricultural interests are not the same built relatively to manufacturing they once were, they are yet of such magnitude as to be a powerful factor in the country's welfare. In the old provinces the yield is admittedly below the average. In hay particularly the crop has fallen far short of the usual. In some sections the shortage is so great as to cause alarm. Grain will be up to the average in most sections, though the straw will be short. The dairy interests have suffered owing to the drouth. The pastures are bare, and a consequent lessening of the milk supply has resulted.

Crop conditions in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are of especial interest at the moment. An assurance of harvest, without frost, would probably render unnecessary some long-winded explanations respecting tight money.

The most intelligible and detailed summaries of present conditions in the crop area show that there is a light yield area in Southern Manitoba, while in the vicinities of the borders of Manitoba and Saskatchewan there has been damage by hail. These handicaps are incidental to an exceptionally heavy showing further west and north. Then the problem of late season and consequently of late harvesting is interjected to offset the favorable conditions mentioned. Harvesting will be over in another fortnight and if there be an absence of frost, a crop large enough to ensure the traditional "good year," will have been garnered.

TOKIO REPORT NOT CREDITED

Ottawa, Oct. 6.—In conversation with a correspondent yesterday morning one of the members of the Dominion Cabinet stated that the government did not attach any importance to the newspaper statements emanating from Tokio to the effect that Japan is unwilling to consent to any limitation of its emigration to Canada. The fact is that Japanese coming still carry the passport issued by their government. Any who are not so provided are held at the request of the Japanese consul at Vancouver as having violated the law of their country by having left without passports. The laws of Japan restricting emigration are most severe and anyone who leaves without a passport or who misrepresents his destination to the Japanese authorities leaves himself open to severe penalties.

Hon. W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration, gets back from the Pacific coast next week it will be known whether the number of emigrants coming to Canada from Japan direct during the past year has exceeded the 500 or 600 that were agreed upon between the two countries as a fair limit some ten years ago. At all events nothing is likely to be done in the matter until Lon. Rodolphe Lemieux has visited Tokio next month and represented to the Japanese government the grounds on which it is desirable that the immigration of Japanese into the Dominion should be restricted.

Canada's case in this matter is so strong that the ministers are satisfied that Mr. Lemieux's efforts will bear fruit. If Tokio, however, should prove obdurate, it is then for the Dominion government to decide what shall be done.

The Cunning Actor.

A specialist in dipsomania was talking about the cunning with which dipsomaniacs in confinement will obtain liquor.

"A certain noted but intemperate actor," said Dr. Gresham James, "was once locked up by his manager in order that he might not spoil the evening performance by overdrinking. His confinement was close. Windows, doors—everything was locked and barred.

"But the actor beckoned to a man in the street, showed a greenback and bawled to him through the closed window to go and buy a bottle of brandy and a clay pipe.

"When the man returned with these purchases the actor called:

"'Stick the pipe stem in through the keyhole.'

"This was done.

"'Now,' said the actor, 'pour the brandy carefully into the bowl.'

"As the fluid fell into the bowl the actor sucked it up, and when his manager came to release him that evening he lay in a corner quite gloriously drunk.'"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Way It Read.

The editor of a little paper was in the habit of cheering up his subscribers daily with a column of short pertinent comments on their town, their habits and themselves. The department was the most popular thing in the paper.

The editor, as he saw it growing in favor, gradually allowed himself a wider latitude in his remarks until the town passed much of its time conjecturing "what he'd dast't to say next."

On a hot day when the simoom whistled gayly up the street of the town depositing everywhere its burden of sand, the editor brought forth this gem of thought:

"All the windows along Main street need washing badly."

The next morning he was waited on by a platoon of indignant citizens, who confronted him with the paragraph in question fresh from the hands of the compositor and informed him fiercely that he had gone too far. After a hasty and horrified glance he admitted that he had. It now read:

"All the widows along Main street need washing badly."—Everybody's.

Home Diplomacy.

Jack—Hullo, Charlie! And how do you enjoy married life, eh? Ever had any differences of opinion with your wife? Charles—Yes, but I don't let her know about them.—Reynolds' Newspaper.

Encouragement.

Frances—Harry says he just wants to fall down and worship me all the time. Her Mamma—Oh, well, don't mind that, dear. After you're married he won't let it interfere with his business.

Long Distance Waggery.

Knicker—Some jokes can be carried too far. Bocker—Yes; for instance, Smith's cottage is seven miles from the station.—New York Sun.

SELECTIONS

Watchmakers' Fine Eyes.

With a magnifying glass fixed like a black spool in his eye, a watchmaker bent over his table, tinkering with the tiny wheels and springs of a lady's watch.

"It makes me nervous to look at you," the lady said. "And how horribly hard such work as yours must be on the eyes!"

The man leaned back, inflated his cramped chest and smiled.

"Quite the contrary, ma'am," he said. "My work is good for the eyes. I have never suffered from bad eyes myself, and I don't know any watchmakers among my friends that have either. Furthermore, when I visited an oculist the other day to get a pair of spectacles for my wife the man told me that my work was beneficial to the eyes because it required the use of a magnifying glass. He said that nothing did the eyes more good than the use of a magnifying glass for two or three hours every day.

"Notice watchmakers hereafter. You will find their sight is always fine."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Apologized.

A delightful story is told of Thomas Poole. When "a person of some local importance and with certain claims to respect and deference" which everybody recognized took it in his head to hold forth in Poole's presence—perhaps out of pure love of irritating a fellow creature—in authoritative disparagement of Coleridge and Wordsworth, Poole boiled over and told the reviler, in the most emphatic manner, that he was a fool.

Poole was sorry for it afterward. "Did I call him a fool? How very wrong of me! How very wrong! Would it do any good to apologize? I am sure, if it would give him any satisfaction, I would apologize in a moment." So he returned—"I am sure, sir, I am very sorry I was rude to you just now. I apologize most sincerely. I wish I wasn't so hasty. It was extremely wrong of me. But—but—but" (with a gulp, as if he were all but choking) "how could you be such a confounded fool?"—London Standard.

A Silkworm of the Sea.

Silk is obtained from the shellfish known as the pinna (mytilidae), which is found in the Mediterranean. This shellfish has the power of spinning a viscid silk which in Sicily is made into a regular and very handsome fabric. The silk is spun by the shellfish, in the first instance, for the purpose of attaching itself to the rocks. It is able to guide the delicate filaments to the proper place and there glue them fast, and if they are cut away it can reproduce them. The material when gathered (which is done at low tide) is washed in soap and water, dried, straightened and carded, one pound of the coarse filament yielding about three ounces of fine thread, which when spun, is of a lovely burnished golden brown color.—London Graphic.

Frivolous Prayer.

In the memoirs of Countess de Boigne, who lived over a hundred years ago, appears the following: "I had a great speculative veneration for that youthful Louise de Conde, weeping for the crimes of her country at the foot of altars. I had formed a romantic idea of her, but it was necessary to avoid seeing the heroine. Common, vulgar and ignorant, she was middle class in her thoughts, in her sentiments, in her actions, words and person. One was tempted to pity God for being so constantly importuned by her. She called on him for help in all the most futile circumstances of her puerile existence. I have seen her offer up prayer to recover a ball of wool which had fallen under her chair."

A Nutmeg Revelation.

"Brush that white powder off the nutmegs before you begin to grate 'em," said the chef to the young apprentice.

"But that's the bloom, ain't it?" remonstrated the lad.

"Bloom!" sneered the chef. "No, sir; it is oyster shell powder. The natives, as soon as they gather the nutmeg, roll it in a powder of ground oyster shells, and that protects it on its long voyage to market from the weevils. The weevils otherwise would eat it up. But the powder has served its turn now, so brush it off."—Exchange.

Naturally.

The youngest member of the family had taken enthusiastically to pyrography.

She had just executed a design representing a little girl playing with the cat in front of an old fashioned fireplace.

"It is well done, Bertha," said her mother, inspecting it, "but you have managed somehow to make the little girl look scared."

"That's all right, mamma," answered Bertha. "A burnt child dreads the fire."—Chicago Tribune.

Unapplauded Heroes.

It is a strange thing that the applause of men greets only those who fight with men. They who battle with the enemies of man, with disease, with accident, with unknown forces and unknown seas and lands, these men must fight and, if necessary, die almost unnoticed by their fellows.—London Lancet.

Plans and Estimates.

Inquiring Son—Pop, is an architect an artist? Pop (who has just had a new house built)—I guess so. They say artists are perfect children about money matters.

You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself into one.—Home Notes.

Two Sides to That.

"You are a fraud. You said yesterday that you had seven starving children, and today you say you have nine.

"Both stories true, sir."

"How do you make that out?"

"Twins born last night."—Exchange.

Trial Catarrh treatments are being mailed out free, on request, by Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this scientific prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy.

CHILD TRAINING.

A School in Which Mothers Should Be Taught the Art.

If a child is told he must not do a certain thing, no argument should change the verdict, and if he disobeys he must be made to pay a penalty one way or another.

He need not be treated with severity, but he may be deprived of some pleasure or privilege or lay and in that way will be made to understand.

Indulgent mothers should remember that they are treating unfairly and unkindly the little creatures whom they love most of all. Their kind of kindness is not kindness at all.

You who are so careful what the child puts into his stomach should watch just as carefully what he puts into his brain.

Through lack of proper training he can acquire a state of mental dyspepsia that will become chronic and which will make it impossible for him to enjoy the very greatest things in life.

Think about it, will you?

The child, like the adult, makes friends, and the more tender your child is loved the better are his fortunes likely to be.

Help your child to be splendid, unselfish, beautiful of character. There are enough of the other kind in the world, and it is people of the better sort that are needed.

There should be a school in which mothers should be taught the art of bringing up their children.

It is upon this marching that the character of the future generations depends.

Those spoiled babies who are allowed to hit their mothers in the mouth with tin pails will never be presidents of the United States. They won't even be able to hold down the job of office boy. Many a man struggled unsuccessfully all through his life to overcome the frightful havoc wrought by the silly indulgence of a doting mother.

GOOD ADVICE.

What to Do When Things Are Lost in Public Places.

When on leaving a theatre, business hall, etc., you discover that some valuable has disappeared, do not lose your head immediately. There are, after all is said, many more honest people in this world than dishonest, and the chances are that if you go about it properly you will recover the article.

First of all, register your loss at the box office or superintendent's room. Give your name and address plainly, being sure that they are correctly taken down, and if you wish to offer any reward for its return mention the amount. Be sure to have money for the announcement to telephone you, if their search is rewarded and give your telephone number. Then call for some one, or if this is not granted get permission yourself, to search the seat of the house in which you were sitting.

If after a day you have no word of the loss, advertise in at least one morning and one evening paper, making the articles explicitly, so as to avoid confusion. If you wish, you may name the theatre as the place to which it is to be returned. Most places are kind and courteous in such matters and only too anxious to help you in your search. If they return the valuable to you, do not forget that the man who has acted as their agent is worthy of thanks at least if you do not wish to reward him in any more substantial way.

And, finally, if the lost article was a piece of jewelry it would be well to have a jeweler make the clasp stronger to avoid further loss.

A man who can lose $500 on stocks and forget about it the next day will complain for weeks about the loss of an umbrella.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2,000 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 700 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont., are authorized to receive subscriptions for this stock, to whom all applications should be made.

On to Willow Creek!

Recent discoveries at Willow Creek, in the Greenwater Copper region, have caused a rush of excited miners The Baltic strike and other explorations of neighboring ground are unquestionably authentic. We have identically the same indications on our Providence group, located near the mouth of Willow Creek, Water is plentiful but transportation hitherto has been difficult. Now the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad has extended into Death Valley, and Willow Creek is attracting capital, and the town of that name contains a thousand souls.

THE GUGGENHEIM-GREENWATER COPPER COMPANY
has had a chance to sell its Willow Creek property for much more than it paid for it; but the Company resolved to hold it and make a mine. The company is now selling stock at TEN cents a share. We have a little left which we can let you have

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

Jessie did not talk; only once, when she asked Guy, if it was very far to heaven, and if he supposed Maddy had got there by this time.

"We'll go just the same," said Guy. "I will do what I can for the old man;" and so the carriage drove on, down the hill, across the meadowland, and past a low-roofed house whose walls inclosed the stiffened form of him for whom the bell had tolled, the boy, fifteen years of age, who had been the patient of another than Dr. Holbrook.

Maddy was not dead, but the paroxysm of restlessness had passed, and she lay now in a heavy sleep so nearly resembling death that they who watched, waited expectantly to see the going out of her last breath. Never before had a carriage like that from Aikenside stopped at that humble cottage, but the neighbors thought it came merely to bring the doctor, whom they welcomed with a glad smile, making a way for him to pass to Maddy's bedside. Guy preferred waiting in the carriage until such time as Grandpa Markham could speak with him, but Jessie went with the doctor into the sick room, startling even the grandmother, and causing her to wonder who the richly dressed child could be.

"Dying, doctor," said one of the women affirmatively, not interrogatively; but the doctor shook his head, and holding in one hand his watch, he counted the faint pulse beats as with his eye he measured off the minute.

"There are too many here," he said. "She needs the air you are breathing," and in his singular, authoritative way, he cleared the crowded room of the mistaken friends who were unwittingly breathing up Maddy's very life.

All but the grandparents and Jessie; these he suffered to remain, and sitting down by Maddy, watched till the long sleep was ended. Silently and earnestly the aged couple prayed for their darling, asking that, if possible, she might be spared, and God heard their prayers, lifting, at last, the heavy fog from Maddy's brain, and waking her to life and partial consciousness. It was Jessie who first caught the expression of the opening eyes, and darting forward, she exclaimed, "She's waked up, Dr. Holbrook. She will live."

Wonderingly Maddy looked at her, and then as a confused recollection of where they had met before crossed her mind, she smiled and said:

"Where am I now? Have I never come home, and is this Dr. Holbrook's office?"

"No, no; it's home, your home, and you are getting well," Jessie cried, bending over the bewildered girl. "Dr. Holbrook has cured you, and Guy is here, and I, and——"

"Hush, you disturb her," the doctor said, gently pulling Jessie away, and himself asking Maddy how she felt.

She did not recognize him. She only had a vague idea that he might be some doctor, but not Dr. Holbrook, sure; not the one who so puzzled and tortured her on a day which seemed now so far behind. From the white-haired man kneeling by the bedside there was a burst of thanksgiving for the life restored, and then Grandpa Markham tottered from the room, out into the open air, which had never fallen so refreshingly on his tired frame as it fell now, when he first knew that Maddy would live. He did not care for his homestead; that might go, and he still be happy with Maddy left. But He who had marked that true disciple's every sigh, had another good in store, willing it so that both should come together, even as the two disappointments had come hand in hand.

From the soft cushions of his carriage, where he sat reclining, Guy Remington saw the old man as he came out, and alighting at once, he accosted him pleasantly, and then walked with him to the garden, where, on a rustic bench, built for Maddy beneath the cherry trees, Grandpa Markham sat down to rest. From speaking of Madeline it was easy to go back to the day when Guy had first met grandpa, whose application for money he had refused.

"I have thought better of it since," he said, "and am sorry I did not accede to your proposal. One object of my coming here to-day was to say that my purse is at your disposal. You can have as much as you wish, paying me whenever you like, and the house will not be sold. Slocum, I understand, holds the mortgage. I will see him to-morrow and stop the whole proceedings."

Guy spoke rapidly, determined to make a clean breast of it, but grandpa understood him, and bowing his white head upon his bosom, the big tears dropped like rain upon the turf, while his lips quivered, first with thanks to the Providence who had truly done all things well, and next with thanks to his benefactor.

"Blessings on your head, young man, for making me so happy. You are worthy of your father, and he was the best of man."

"My father—did you know him?" Guy asked in some surprise, and then the story came out, how, years before, when a city hotel was on fire, and one of the guests in imminent danger from the locality of his room, and his own nervous fear which made him powerless to act, another guest braved fearlessly the hissing flame, and scaling the tottering wall, dragged out to life and liberty one who, until that hour, was to him an utter stranger.

Pushing back his snowy hair, Grandfather Markham showed upon his temple a long, white scar, obtained the night when he periled his own life to save that of another. There was a doubly warm pressure now of the old man's hand, as Guy replied, "I've heard that story from father himself, but the name of his preserver had escaped me. Why didn't you tell me who you were?"

"I thought 'twould look too much like demanding it as a right—too much like begging, and I s'pose I felt too proud. Pride is my besetting sin—the one I pray most against."

Guy looked keenly now at the man whose besetting sin was pride, and as he marked the cheapness of his attire, his pantaloons faded and short, his coat worn threadbare and shabby, his shoes both patched at the toes, his cotton shirt minus a bosom, and then thought of the humble cottage, with its few rocky acres, he wondered of what he could be proud.

Meantime, for Maddy, Dr. Holbrook had prescribed perfect quiet, bidding them darken again the window from which the shade had been removed, and ordering all save the grandmother to leave the room; and let the patient sleep, if possible. Even Jessie was not permitted to stay, though Maddy clung to her as to a dear friend. In a few whispered words Jessie had told her name, saying she came from Aikenside, and that her Brother Guy was there, too, outdoors, in the carriage. "He heard how sick you were at Devonshire, this morning, and drove right home for me to come to see you. I told him of you that day in the office, and that's why he brought me, I guess. You'll like Guy. I know all the girls do—he's so good."

Sick and weary as she was, and unable as yet to comprehend the entire meaning of all she heard, Maddy was conscious of a thrill of pride in knowing that Guy Remington, from Aikenside, was interested in her, and had brought his sister to see her. Winding her feeble arms around Jessie's neck, she kissed the soft, warm cheek, and said, "You'll come again, I hope."

"Yes, every day, if mamma will let me. I don't mind it a bit, if you are poor."

"Tut, tut, little tattler!" and Dr. Holbrook, who, unseen by the children had all the while been standing near, took Jessie by the arm. "What makes you think them poor?"

Stomach troubles, Heart and Kidney ailments can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. The prompt and surprising relief which this remedy immediately brings is entirely due to its restorative action upon the controlling nerves of the Stomach, etc. Sold by all dealers.

The Vanishing Trick.

Into the grocer's shop walked an ancient lady with a slow and halting tread and carrying on her arm a basket containing a large earthenware pot with a lid. Placing the basket on the counter, she made various purchases, which she put carefully in the pot, and had her bill made out.

"By the way," she said before paying this, "do you mind keeping this pot with the purchases in it until I come back and pay for them, as I have to buy other things some distance off, and it will be more convenient for me to leave the things here till later?"

This request was willingly acceded to, and, lifting the pot carefully out of the basket, the old dame placed it, with an effort, in a corner; then, placing her basket on her arm, left the shop. Hours went by, day ripened into evening, and evening gave way to night, but the old woman did not return. At last the proprietor thought of examining the earthenware pot to see if by any chance it had its owner's address upon it, and great was his astonishment, not untinged with dismay, to find that it possessed no bottom.—London Answers.

Witchcraft in the Nineteenth Century.

Most people believe that witchcraft among civilized people ended when the "Salem witch mania" ran its course and died out in the year 1692. It did as far as America is concerned, except among savages, but in other countries the belief in the superstition did not die until a much later date, even if it can be truly said to be dead now. In France an old beggar was tortured to death as late as 1807 on the charge of being one who "communed with evil spirits," and in Spain a witch was burned in 1808. In 1860 in France a man and his wife tortured a suspected witch to death, and nothing at all was done with them by the criminal courts on account of the lingering belief in sorcery. Four years later a witch was drowned in England, and in 1860 one was burned in Mexico. In 1874, 1879, 1880 and again in 1889 witches were publicly burned in Russia, and even as late as 1890 regular judicial trials of witches were had in Prussia, Poland and Austria-Hungary.

Hoped He Wouldn't Grow.

A well known member of parliament was addressing an agricultural meeting in the south of England and in the course of his remarks expressed the opinion that farmers do not sufficiently vary their crops and make a mistake in always sowing wheat.

One of the audience opposed to him in politics asked him what crops he would recommend.

"Everything in turn," he replied.

"Well," said his interlocutor, "if swedes don't come up, what then?"

"Sow mustard," said the M. P.

"And if mustard doesn't come up, what then?"

And so he went on through a whole list of crops until the M. P.'s patience being exhausted, he put an end to his questioning amid roars of laughter by saying:

"Oh, sow yourself, and I hope you won't come up."

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. This tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—causes blood pressure away from pain centers. Perfect, charming, pleasingly delightful. Gently, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure. If it's painful periods with women, same reason. If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets help in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS.

Circumstantial Evidence.

Chick Bruce was a famous Adirondack guide, who accompanied Grover Cleveland on one or two of his hunting trips in those mountains. Chick left Mr. Cleveland sitting on a log one morning while he went out to drive down a deer should he chance to find one. When he came back he saw his distinguished employer still sitting on the log, but with the muzzle of his gun pointing directly at the presidential chest.

"Here," shouted Chick, "quit that, dod gast ye! Suppose that gun had gone off and you had killed yourself, what would have happened to me? Dern ye, everybody knows I'm a Republican!"

A Large Order.

The proprietor of a certain restaurant "leased" the reverse side of his bill of fare to a carriage manufacturer, who prints advertisements thereon. The other day a customer, in a great hurry, ran into the restaurant, sat at a table and was handed a bill wrong side up by the flurried waiter. The customer put on his pince-nez, curled his mustache with his left hand and shouted in a voice of thunder: "Bring me a fly, a landau, two victorias and a dogcart. Got any funeral cars?" The waiter fled.—London Graphic.

Judgment Reversed.

Schoolteacher—I am sorry to complain, but Johnnie Jones has been very impertinent. Principal—You must be more patient, Miss Howard. Teach the children to respect you as they do me, and we shall have fewer complaints. What did he say? Schoolteacher—He said you were the skinniest old maid alive!

The Disadvantages of Schools.

"Why have you taken your son out of school without asking permission?" father (a grocer)—But they were ruining him. I wish to bring him up to carry on my business, and they were teaching him that there are sixteen ounces in a pound.—Motto Pu Ildere.

Other Insects in Ants' Nests.

It is certain that ants intentionally sanction the residence of certain insects in their nests. This is the case, for instance, with the curious blind beetle, claviger, which is absolutely dependent upon ants. It even seems to have lost the power of feeding itself. At any rate, it is habitually fed by the ants, who supply it with nourishment, as they do one another.

Trivial.

"Trivial" is derived from the Latin for three ways and means the petty gossip of the crossroads.

Hindoo Girls.

Every Hindoo girl is a wife or a widow at fourteen. Girls have actually been married before they were a year old, and from four to six years they very commonly cease to be single. Eight is a marriageable age, and twelve is the maximum, except in a few districts.

Olive Oil.

Two tablespoonfuls of pure olive oil is said to contain more nourishment than a pound of meat or a cupful of butter and, being in a stage of natural emulsion, is digested promptly, making blood, fat and weight.

This company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proven mineral land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles north of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bend and Daisy Mines near the Zion group in the Diamondfield section and only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprage district, which has an immense gold-bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and with with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

SAVED HER LIFE!

Wife and Mother Restored to Her Anxious Family

St. John, N.B., Sept. 14.—At one time it was feared that Mrs. J. Grant, of 23 White street, would succumb to the deadly ravages of advanced kidney trouble. "My first attacks of backache and kidney trouble began years ago. For six years that dull gnawing pain has been present. When I exerted myself it was terribly intensified. If I caught cold the pain was unendurable. I used most everything, but nothing gave that certain grateful relief that come from Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. Instead of being bowed down with pain, today I am strong, enjoy splendid appetite, sleep soundly. Lost properties have been instilled into my blood—cheeks are rosy with color, and I thank the day that I heard of so grand a medicine as Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Every woman should use these pills regularly because good health pays, and it's good, vigorous health that comes to all who use Dr. Hamilton's Mandrake and Butternut Pills.

IN SHORT FORM FOR BUSY READERS

—The City Council met last night. Full particulars on the front page.

—His Lordship Bishop O'Connor returned yesterday from Douro where he held a large confirmation.

—Mr. E Elcome, the local taxidermist expert has now in his workshop a pure black woodchurck, or as others know it, a ground hog for mounting. This is quite a curiosity, and well worth the seeing.

—The death occurred yesterday morning at St. Joseph's Hospital of Mrs. R. Howell, of Millbrook. The deceased was 65 years of age and had resided all her life in Millbrook.

—Last night, notwithstanding the inclement weather, a good crowd gathered at the Charlotte street roller rink to see the greatest expert that ever wore roller skates do his certainly superior stunts.

—Much excitement was created through the city yesterday over the poker game arrests. Why some years ago, not saying so to condone the recently discovered game, there was more poker playing going on in local hotels in one night than there is now in one month. Inferences are obvious.

—The graduating exercises in connection with the Nicholls Hospital Training School for Nurses, will take place at the Y.M.C.A. this evening at eight o'clock. Diplomas will be presented to four young ladies. An interesting program is being prepared for the occasion.

—The Dan Spence Council, Royal Templars of Temperance, will meet this evening in their hall on George street. There will be a good program. Mr. Harry Dunford, one of the few survivors of the wreck of the Victoria in her collision with the Camperdown, a few years ago, will speak on the disaster.

Kawartha Lakes and Rice Lake have given all records this year for size and weight. Among the extra large ones was a 34 1-2 pounder, caught by R. H. MacDougall of Fenelon Falls, a 31 lbs., caught by Mr. Metheral of this city, a 33 lb. caught by Wm. A. Moore, New York. These three can be seen mounted at E. Elcome's, taxidermist.

At last night's performance in the Charlotte street rink, Professor Renoe on roller skates mounted and rode a barrel for five feet. The performance also included the slide on roller skates from the gallery to the floor down a plank, through a circle and other stunts well worth seeing. Miss Kathleen Hilton, the dainty 16-year-old girl, who assists the professor, is also well worth more than a passing attention, her work bordering on the marvellous.

—Mr. Douglas Stocker, a brother of Mr. Walter Stocker, the city bill poster, is a guest of the latter. This visitor to Peterborough is a resident of the city of Mexico, Mexico, where he carries on a large business.

His Mother's Ruse Failed.

A Kansas City professional man, who is prominently identified with Missouri politics, tells the following story on himself:

"My folks moved from Indiana to Johnson county, Mo., when I was six years of age. We settled on a farm near Holden. The first Sunday we were there and while the family was preparing for Sunday school it was discovered that I did not have any shoes. My mother, realizing that 'folks would talk' if one of her children made his first public appearance barefooted, suggested that I have a cloth tied around one foot to create the impression that I was unable to wear shoes because of a sore foot. So the rag was tied on me. Everything went along smoothly, and I learned all about bears eating the bad children up when I heard a snicker from a boy I afterward licked. He was pointing to my right foot. I glanced downward.

"The rag had slipped off, and my mother's ruse was exposed."—Kansas City Star.

Speechless, but Graphic.

A knowledge of the art of drawing is sometimes very useful. A well known caricaturist had done himself very well at a dance and was being put into a cab by some friends, none of whom knew where he lived, and he himself was more or less speechless. At last, however, he managed to extricate a pencil and a sheet of paper from his pocket and drew a sketch, which, when finished, he handed out of the cab. The drawing was a clear sketch of a well known church steeple in Langham place. They all recognised it, and, with shrieks of laughter, handed it to the cabman, who remarked:

"All right, I knows it—Langham street," and he drove off.—Illustrated Bits.

The Stage Doorkeeper.

It is one of the traditions of the profession that every actor and actress on entering the theater shall say "Good evening" and on leaving "Good night" to the stage doorkeeper. During the many dreary hours I have been permitted to stand in the stuffy hallways of many stage doorkeepers I have never known an actor, from the haughtiest Shakespearean star to the lowliest chorus girl, fail to greet the stage doorkeeper with enthusiasm, and I can remember but few instances of the greeting ever having been returned.—Charles Belmont Davis in Outing Magazine.

Her Secret Sorrow.

"That woman over there has some hidden sorrow," declared the sympathetic one as she came in and took her seat at a table not far away. "I have often noticed her. See. Her companion orders everything she could possibly want, and yet she sits there silent with a face like a mask. I am awfully sorry for her."

"Don't you worry," advised her pessimistic friend. "That's her husband with her. She's bored, that's all."—New York Press.

Question For Question.

"My son wants to marry your daughter. Does she know how to cook a good dinner?"

"Yes, if she gets the materials for one. Does your son know how to supply them?"—Baltimore American.

POSTUM

"There's a Reason."

Both Were Collectors.

A local newspaper artist got a letter one day from a man over in Indiana who said he was making a collection of sketches. "I have drawings from well known newspaper artists in nearly every state in the Union," the Indiana man wrote, "but I have none from Ohio. I have seen some of your work, and I think it is good. If you will send me some little sketch for my collection I shall have it framed."

The artist noticed from the letterhead that the Indiana man was connected with a bank in one of the small towns over in the state of literature. That gave him a hunch, and he wrote back as follows:

"I am making a collection of ten dollar bills. I haven't secured specimens from every state in the Union, but I have several tens and a few twenties, and I am particularly anxious to have a ten dollar bill from Indiana. I notice that you are employed in a place where ten dollar bills are kept, and if you send me one for my collection I shall be glad to have it framed."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Presence of Mind.

Although it is not given to everybody to know exactly what to do at the right moment, one woman at least can lay claim to a presence of mind which may, without undue exaggeration, be considered phenomenal. This woman's little boy was ailing with some trivial childish complaint, and the doctor ordered him some medicine. He had just taken his daily dose when his mother said, with some excitement:

"I quite forgot to shake that bottle afore givin ye't, Johnnie. Come here."

Johnnie obeyed, and, much to his astonishment and disgust, was subjected to a vigorous shaking from the strong arms of the parent, at the conclusion of which he was laid down with the remark:

"There, my laddie, that'll dae. It should be gey weel mixed up noo, I'm thinkin', but don't let me forget again."

Johnnie promised.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Wardrobe in a Hat.

Grandfather De Voe is an artist who appreciates fine millinery. His young married daughter, however, was practicing domestic economy when a hat, a beautiful creation in real lace, arrived for little Elise from her devoted grandparent, whose eye had surrendered to this bit of baby apparel the moment he saw it in a department store.

"That hat is entirely too extravagant for this family," remarked the young mother. "I'll take it back and see what I can do."

A few days later the grandfather called to see the baby in the new hat.

"Do let me see how she looks in it," he said. "And how did you like it?"

"Very much, father, thank you. They gave me two hats, two dresses, a sweater and 39 cents in change for it."—Youth's Companion.

Signs of Long Life.

In view of the diversified testimony of present day centenarians on the subject of longevity and its causes, it is interesting to get a little light on the subject from Queen Elizabeth's time.

"Bacon took a deep interest in longevity and its earmarks," says a physician, "and Bacon's signs of long life and of short life are as true today as they ever were. You won't live long, Bacon pointed out, if you have soft, fine hair, a fine skin, quick growth, large head, early corpulence, short neck, small mouth, brittle and separated teeth and fat ears. Your life, barring accidents, will be very lengthy if you have slow growth, coarse hair, a rough skin, deep wrinkles in the forehead, firm flesh, a large mouth, wide nostrils, strong teeth set close together and a hard, grisly ear."

The Claw of the Devil.

In the middle ages people recognized witches and possessed persons by seeking on their bodies for what was called the claws of the devil. It was a more or less extensive part of the skin in which the subject was insensible to any touch or prick. The expert intrusted with this work would close the eyes of the subject and, armed with a sharp needle, prick here and there the different parts of the body. The sufferer was to answer with a cry to each prick, and the claw of the devil on a certain spot was recognized from the fact that he did not cry when this spot was examined.—From "The Major Symptoms of Hysteria," by Pierre Janet.

Learn to Be Genial.

There are many people who excuse themselves from the little amenities and kindnesses of life on the ground that they are not natural to them. These people say they are reserved by disposition and cannot be free and easy in meeting other people. But we can learn to row a boat or to write shorthand or to speak a new language. That unaffected simplicity of address which made Ruskin so approachable to child or man was the work of a long life's discipline.

The Unveiling.

Great occasions do not make heroes or cowards, they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silently and imperceptibly, as we wake or sleep, we grow and wax strong, we grow and wax weak, and at last some crisis shows us what we have become.—Canon Westcott.

A Modern Heart.

"Do you see that lady over there? She broke my cousin's heart."

"Was she so cruel?"

"No, but the day before he broke off his engagement to her she inherited 200,000 marks."—Fliegende Blatter.

Take in the Meeting Tonight

Don't forget the Board of Trade meeting tonight when assessment matters will be discussed and your grievance can be as readily aired and discussed as those of the plutocrats. It is to be hoped most sincerely that every man or woman owning taxable property will be present tonight to express their opinion and verdict on the present way local assessments are made. It is generally conceded that a change must be made.

A Square Deal

Is assured you when you buy Dr. Pierce's family medicines—for all the ingredients entering into them are printed on the bottle-wrappers and their formulas are attested under oath as being complete and correct. You know just what you are paying for and that the ingredients are gathered from Nature's laboratory, being selected from the most valuable native medicinal roots found growing in our American forests and while potent to cure are perfectly harmless even to the most delicate women and children. Not a drop of alcohol enters into their composition. A much better agent is used both for extracting and preserving the medicinal principles used in them, viz.—pure triple-refined glycerine. This agent possesses intrinsic medicinal properties of its own, being a most valuable antiseptic and antiferment, nutritive and soothing demulcent.

Glycerine plays an important part in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia and weak stomach, attended by sour risings, heart-burn, foul breath, coated tongue, poor appetite, gnawing feeling in stomach, biliousness and kindred derangements of the stomach, liver and bowels.

Besides curing all the above distressing ailments, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a specific for all diseases of the mucous membranes, as catarrh, whether of the nasal passages or of the stomach, bowels or pelvic organs. Even in its ulcerative stages it will yield to this sovereign remedy if its use be persevered in. In Chronic Catarrh of the Nasal passages, it is well, while taking the "Golden Medical Discovery" for the necessary constitutional treatment, to cleanse the passages freely two or three times a day with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. This thorough course of treatment generally cures the worst cases.

In coughs and hoarseness caused by bronchial, throat and lung affections, except consumption in its advanced stages, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most efficient remedy, especially in those obstinate, hang-on coughs caused by irritation and congestion of the bronchial mucous membranes. The "Discovery" is not so good for acute coughs arising from sudden colds, nor must it be expected to cure consumption in its advanced stages—no medicine will do that—but for all the obstinate, chronic coughs, which, if neglected, or badly treated, lead up to consumption, it is the best medicine that can be taken.

BIG MEETING OF CITIZENS PROTEST AGAINST ASSESSMENT

Large Increase Thought to be Unwarrantable

Ressolution Passed Urging Court of Revision to Investigate

The biggest and probably most important meeting ever held by the Board of Trade took place in the council chamber last night, amid intense enthusiasm on the part of more citizens than the chamber could comfortably accommodate.

President Dr. Morrison presided.

Amongst the large gathering of interested citizens present were: Mayor R. F. McWilliams, Ald. McIntyre, Father McColl, G. Walter Green, J. J. Turner, Mar., D. Hughes Charles, F. D. Kerr, R. J. Winch, Walter Stocker, Wm. Langford, Dawson Kennedy, R. E. Layfield, Robert McWhinnie, Jas. Edgar, Robert Innes, L. M. Hayes, H. R. H. Kenner, H. LeBrun, W. H. Moore, R. E. Wood, T. F. Matthews, B. F. Ackerman, Thos. Barrie, A. H. Stratton and G. B. Vanflandercom.

Every available seat was occupied, and standing room was at a premium.

The main question before the board was a discussion of the high rate of assessment this year, particularly in wards one and two, and Assessors McKee and McGrath were both present.

A significant feature of the attendance was the fact that almost all those present were property owners, testifying to the intense interest created in the Board of Trades' commendable action, advised by Mr. F. D. Kerr, in opening up an investigation.

The speakers generally censured the City Council for allowing the two assessors to work separately, which action it was freely stated could not be productive of any other results than an tween the two divisions of the city handled by Messrs. McKee and McGrath. It was agreed by the majority that the only way to arrive at an equable valuation was for two good men to act in conjunction with each other as in former years. Had the increase in wards three and four been commensurate with that in wards one and two the city as a whole would have been better satisfied to accept the increased assessment as a current valuation according to the fact and improved conditions. As it is, citizens are not satisfied to abide by the assessment of Mr. McKee, and the following resolution was carried:

"Moved by Mr. W. H. Meldrum, seconded by Mr. Hughes Charles, —That this meeting of citizens called by the Board of Trade of the City of Peterborough, after hearing and discussing the assessment for 1908 and the large increase, and, as claimed, the unequal assessment, especially in wards one and two, this meeting would respectfully impress on the court of revision the desirability of thoroughly investigating the conditions affecting the assessment of 1908, and if such assessment is unjust to any citizen of the city, we recommend such assessment should be equalized in the interests of both citizens and city. —Carried."

Ratepayers should bear in mind that in order to secure any readjustment of the assessment it will be necessary for each person who considers himself to have been improperly assessed to appeal individually to the court of revision on or before October 21st, thirteen days from today

BANQUET IN NOVEMBER.

The following resolution was carried:

That the council of the Board of Trade recommends that at the next general meeting of the board, arrangements should be made for a banquet to be held in November, and that a committee be appointed to provide a speaker for that evening and to work out the details.

Mr. R. E. Wood moved, seconded by Mr. H. LeBrun.—That the president, vice president, Messrs. R. E. Wood, F. D. Kerr and J. H. Larmonth be appointed a committee to make arrangements for a banquet to be held in November, and that they provide a speaker for that evening and work out the details.—Carried.

P. O. BOXES

The president pointed out that as a postal delivery system is now being operated in Peterborough, the postal authorities intend increasing the rent of P. O. Boxes.

The mayor replied that Mr. Ross the government inspector had informed him that the government would rather the box system be atolished than reclaimed at any rental.

Mr. R. E. Wood moved, seconded by Mr. T. F. Matthews.—That the post Minaster general be requested to allow the box rents at the P. O. to remain as at present or that the rent be reduced. —Carried

THE ASSESSMENT

The question of the assessment was here gone into, and the president called upon the mayor to open up the proceedings by giving the law governing assessment.

Mayor R. F. McWilliams quoted from the new assessment act which provides that real property shall be assessed at its actual value; buildings and lands shall be assessed separately and at their actual values; and vacant lands must be valued at the prices at which sales can be freely made. He quoted an authority's opinion that actual values means the price at which within a reasonable time and with due care property could be disposed of.

His worship then went on to assure the gathering that no person or body in the city had any earthly authority to instruct the assessors how they shall base their values; in this matter they must be governed entirely by the act, under oath. The council of course, he admitted must accept the full responsibility for appointing Messrs. McKee and McGrath assessors and for whether they work together or separately; they are both admitted to be very capable men and have both acted as assessor twenty years now. As to appointing an assessment commissioner, his worship asserted that while many of the aldermanic board believed in such an appointment, but have not yet been able to agree upon any one man in the city fitted for the position. But an assessment commissioner does not make the actual assessments; he supervises the actual assessors.

The mayor here definitely asserted that the council had not in any way instructed Messrs. McKee and McGrath as to the manner in which they should make their assessment. He had heard many complaints of Mr. McKee's high values and a few of Mr. McGrath's. He had spoken to Mr. McKee on the matter and received the reply that he was complying strictly with the provisions of the act in assessing as closely as possible to actual values. Of course it was a question weterhh both assessors had been assessing on the same basis or not; this will be divulged in the individual cases which go before the court of revision. The city's revenue last year from taxes was $115,000; this years $122,000, and next year will probably be $130,000.

A ratepayer of Ward one said he was willing to receive the amount of the assessor's valuation of his property, which has increased $175 this year. He would like to be shown the reason for so extraordinary a jump in value.

Mr. R. E. Wood remarked that the last speaker merely ratified the assessor's valuation. The assessor is pledged to assess at actual values, and the speaker's willingness to sell his property at the assessor's valuation, proves pretty conclusively that his valuation is correct. Should he be assessed too high, however, he can have recourse to the court of revision. He believed the grievance against the present assessments arouse from the fact that the as-

King Edward is Growing Deaf

New York, Oct. 9.—Edward VII. of England is growing deaf. This fact became known on Saturday, when artificial hearing instruments were shipped to Buckingham Palace by the American line steamer New York, for the use of the King and Queen Alexandra, who has long suffered from deafness. The instruments are the finest and most complete ever made. There are three sets. The sound concentrator or transmitter and ear pieces are of ivory, connected with white silk covered cord and fitted with head band. The second is the same size, but finished in black, while the third is in box form resembling a camera containing two transmitters and cord for use at theatre or table. All the metal parts are finished in gold.

The fact that King Edward is hard of hearing will be a great surprise to the public generally. The secret has been well kept in the royal retinue. Queen Alexandra has been afflicted with deafness most of her life, and has tried many inventions, but they have all failed to help her.

Passports Are Not Necessary for Japs

Portland, Ore., Oct. 9.—"But there is no regulation barring entry of any alien not having a passport from his own government. If such a regulation exists I am not aware of it."

This statement was made by Judge C. E. Wolverton, of the United States district court in deciding the case of Capt. Maurice Hemet, of the French bark St. Louis, who was fined recently by the United States Commissioner on the charge of violating the immigration law prohibiting masters of vessels from landing aliens and forbidding their admission to this country.

The case grew out of the escape of two Japanese sailors from the St. Louis who had signed at Kobe, Japan, for round trip. Hemet's defense was that the Japanese had no intention of coming to this country when they signed for the trip. Captain Hemet also asserted that the order issued by President Roosevelt last May excluding Japanese and Koreans from this country was in excess of his authority. Judge Wolverton ruled that the Japanese sailors were not improperly in this country and discharged the defendant.

The Conferring of Diplomas

Interesting Function at the Y.W.C.A Last Night

The exercises in connection with the conferring of diplomas and presentation of medals to the members of the Nurses' Graduating Class of 1906-7, took place last night in the Y.W.C.A. There was a large audience present and a delightful program was rendered.

Mr. Richard Hall, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Nicholls Hospital, gave the opening address, followed by a piano selection by Miss Meldrum. Rev. Mr. Webb delivered an excellent address to the nurses, after which Mr. Frank Bemrose of Toronto, rendered a pleasingly acceptable vocal solo. Dr. Young followed with an address on "Duties and Responsibilities of Nurses," after which the presentation of diplomas and medals took place.

Miss Helen Davies in excellent voice gave a vocal selection which was followed by the presentation of handsome prizes to Miss Radcliffe and Miss Steele, two of the graduating nurses. Mr. Frank Bemrose then rendered a vocal selection, which was heartily encored. The valedictory by Miss Bertha Mowery, was delivered with good effect.

The following comprise the graduating class, each of whom received a medal presented by the chairman; Mrs Mabel K. Douglas, Miss Margaret Radcliffe, Miss Bertha Mowery, and Miss Carey Steele.

Judgment was Reserved in the Hotel Cases Yesterday

Yesterday's bright October sunshine brought out justly a number of the Sunfish Club, whom the intellectual delights and moral leisures inculcated by a liquor case invariably draw from their warm leaning walls.

The first case called was that of Jas. A. Lawless, represented by Mr. J. A. Harrison of Toronto, official legal advisor of the License Victuallers Protection Association. Mr. Lawless was charged with having sold intoxicating liquors during prohibited hours on Oct. 6th. The first step in the proceedings was the calling of a long list of witnesses all of whom were present but two. Mr. Moore acted for the prosecution and asked that the witnesses leave the Court-room. He asked that Mr. Reagan of the National Hotel be removed. This Mr. Harrison objected to saying he was allowed to hear same and to instruct him. Mr. Harrison was asked for the names of his witnesses. He said he had none and would not put Reagan in the box so he was allowed to stay. The first witness called was Inspector Stewart who said he knew Lawless the defendant, who keeps the National Hotel. Last Sunday morning he was there at 2 a.m. having been there since midnight. He had two policemen with him, Meharry and Newhall. He went there because he had received complaints as to illegal selling and gambling going on. He went to the east side of the hotel on Water street. He saw into the bar. The light was on full in the bar. Joe Guerin was in the bar. He is a bar-tender. Guerin took bottles to the door of the hall. Witness saw something apparently from the bar carried up-stairs. He heard people talking and bottles and glasses clinking upstairs. At about one o'clock he saw men take off their coats and sit down. P.C. Newhall and witness went up the back stairs, to the room he had watched from outside. The door was locked. He tapped gently on the door, which was unlocked after witness had answered from an enquiry inside the room, "It's a friend, open the door." There were six people in the room. Another man entered bare-headed later on. The six were seated at a table on which was money. He saw $113. A bottle and a glass was in front of each occupant of the room. Two trays of empty bottles and glasses were produced in court.

To Mr. Harrison, witness said he saw neither Lawless nor Reagan that night. He saw no strong liquor, only lager. The men were all sober and behaved quietly. He got into the hotel through the cellar. Newhall got in the same way.

P.C. Newhall next went into the box and corroborated the evidence of Inspector Stewart. He saw the night-watchman carry what appeared a tray of bottles up the back stairs. In cross-examination he said he and Stewart got in through the cellar. He refused and was sustained by his worship to give away a "Pass-Word" he knew to get into the place.

This closed the case for the prosecution and the Magistrate asked for the defence. Mr. Harrison remarked that he would call no witnesses.

The Magistrate said that under the evidence he could not but make a conviction.

Mr. Armstrong, City Clerk here went into the box and showed that he had records of a conviction of Mr. Lawless for illegal sale of liquor on August 4th, 1906.

Mr. Harrison then showed that where it was sought to make a second conviction in the case of the Queen vs Brown the late Chief Justice Armour ruled that it is necessary that the defendant shall be first asked whether he had been convicted previously; if he acknowledged a previous conviction he then be punished accordingly but if defendant declines to answer, the Magistrate will hear the matter proven. Now Mr. Lawless was not here to be asked this question as demanded by the statute, so the Magistrate could not make a second conviction.

Mr. Harrison went on to note other technical reasons against a second conviction being made however a search of the records of the former conviction disclosed the fact that his objections did not hold good. He finished up by noting that it lay in the Magistrate's jurisdiction to make a first conviction and asked that such be done as Mr. Lawless was not present at the trial.

Mr. Moore, for the prosecution argued for a second conviction as a point of law explaining however, that the prosecution had no personal animous against Lawless and showed how inspector was bound by the law, under a penalty, and possible loss of office to try for a second conviction when he knew that a former conviction under similar circumstances had been made

The Magistrate reserved judgment for a week in the matter of a second conviction.

THE GAMBLING CASE

The next case, that against Mr. Reagan, clerk of the National Hotel, which arose through the gambling in the hotel which was reported in yesterday's issue was quickly disposed of. No evidence was taken but Mr. Harrison addressed the Court explaining the intention of the defence. His Worship also reserved judgment for a week in this case.

Harry K. Thaw's Second Trial

New York, Oct. 9.—Harry K. Thaw's second trial will begin on December 2. This arrangement was reached between District Attorney Jerome, Martin W. Littleton, counsel for Thaw, and Justice Dowling, of the Supreme Court, today. Mr. Littleton wanted the date fixed for November 1, but Mr. Jerome opposed this, and offered the date which was selected.

Charges Against Dirty Bakeries

Winnipeg, Oct. 9.—Some startling statements will be made in a report on sanitary conditions in city bakeries now being prepared by city health department officials. It is claimed to have been shown that in many bakes bakeries are not in proper condition. The department has already taken action against some proprietors. The definite statement is being made that ingredients for bread are allowed to stand about so that they collect a liberal supply of dust and dirt. The utensils used, according to the officials are far from clean. The further statement is made that the bakers are not, cleanly in person, in numerous instances using dirty hands in the dough and wearing dirty aprons

Disappointed Lover Takes His Own Life

Montreal, Oct. 9.—Because Miss Mary Hane would not consent to marry him, Mrs Victor Hane drew a 32 calibre American bulldog revolver and shot himself in the heart at No. 176 Joliette street Saturday afternoon.

This is the said statement of the tragedy of which Hane was at once sole witness and motive. They both boarded in this house. Hane had come to Canada from Belgium only a few months ago. The deed was committed shortly before four o'clock.

When the sound of the shot was heard Mr. Arthur Amiot, who lives across the way, at once rushed over and found Miss Hane lying in a faint in the passage, while in an adjoining room Hane's body lay across the bed.

The only other inmate of the house at the time was the proprietress, Mrs. Raymond, who was on the lower floor when the shot was fired and arrived on the scene shortly after Amiot. Mrs. Raymond was a married sister of Miss Hane.

The girl had returned Hane's affection, as she was only sixteen years old, and her relatives on this account would not consent to her marriage. On Saturday afternoon the young man made his last appeal. He was then standing in his room holding the door open, while Miss Hane was in the hallway. Exactly what words passed between them in not known, as the girl herself has been prostrated since the tragedy, and yesterday had to be removed to the Notre Dame Hospital, but the man's act is taken to indicate that in their last talk the girl gave him no hope of their immediate union.

The victim was 21 years of age and was earning good wages in the Angus shops. His recent dejection, however, caused him to abandon work all day Saturday, and as no revolver had been seen about his room previously he evidently purchased the weapon in anticipation of his deed. It is stated at his former boarding house that he was strictly temperate in his habits.

Wedding at Salvation Army Barrack

Last night a Hallelujah wedding was celebrated at the Simcoe street Salvation Army barracks. Mr. Archie Gooch of Toronto, was linked in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Ethel Fisk of the Queen City. Both bride and groom are former residents of Peterborough. Mr. Gooch is a well known bandsman, being a member of Lippincott street band of Toronto, while his bride is a popular young lady, and devoted worker in the Army.

The Worst Forms of Bladder Trouble

Relieved by This Simple Home Mixture Anyone Can Prepare

Here is a prescription that anyone can mix at home. Any good prescription pharmacy can supply the ingredients named at little cost; being compound of vegetable extracts, it is harmless and inexpensive. Best of all it does its work well, relieving even the worst forms of bladder trouble, frequent urination, backache, kidney complaint, and by its direct action upon the organs of the kidneys, makes these most vital organs filter the blood and system of waste matter and uric acid which causes rheumatism.

Here it is; try it if you suffer. Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime.

A well-known local druggist is authority for the statement that one week's use shows good results in nearly every instance, and such symptoms as lame back, frequent desire to urinate, pain in bladder and even chronic rheumatism are generally relieved within a few days, the pain and swelling diminishing with each dose.

THE SIX DAY Y. M. C. A. CAMPAIGN A GREAT SUCGESS

Over $1800 Raised for the Work of the Association

Committees Were Entertained at a Banquet

The Six-Day Campaign for $1800 in subscriptions from the citizens to meet the budget to Dec. 31st, 1907, closed last evening with a banquet at the Y. M. C. A. Building. Early in the day it looked as if the Association had an insurmountable task before them but Secretary Geo. H. Williamson had abundance of confidence in the citizens of Peterborough to come to the association's assistance as many of the friends of the association had not been seen personally, and never once did he think of giving up in despair, but urged and encouraged the different committees to keep on with the good work.

At the banquet given last night to the different committees engaged, the general chairman, Mr. J. C. Shook, reported that several hundreds would yet have to be given to realize the $1800, which they were trying to raise. A subscription list was at once opened and those present responded liberally with the result that not only the required amount was forthcoming, but a small surplus was on hand. It was a great source of pleasure to Secretary Williamson, who is severing his connection with the association here, to have gained the victory they have been struggling for the past six days, and he considers the citizens of Peterborough could have made no more satisfactory endorsement of his ten-and-a-half years of service than by enabling the Citizens and Young Men's Committees to raise the $1800 necessary for the annual budget.

Believes Asiatics to be Necessary in British Columbia

Montreal, Oct. 8.—That the Oriental is necessary, adjunct to the development of British Columbia is the contention of Dr. Robert Johnston, pastor of the American Presbyterian Church, who has just returned from the west. In British Columbia he discussed the matter very carefully with many employers of labor and became convinced that the desire to exclude the Asiatic exists largely among the laboring class. The white immigration, however, he states, cannot keep pace with the expansion of the province and unless wages are to go beyond reasonable bounds the Japanese and Chinese must be admitted.

The agitation against them, he declares seems to have originated with the labor unions. Although they probably had no intention of causing riot. The Asiatics had no labor organizations, they were content to work for whatever wage they could get, and sometimes this is pretty high, and they are in most cases more reliable. Especially was this true of the Japanese who do the greater part of the work in connection with the salmon fishing industry. They never went on strike and would more readily do work of a menial character. These things gained them ill-will of the white labor class.

The morality of the Japanese and Chinese, Dr. Johnston thinks is not as high as it might be and he suggests that should legislation be passed to prevent them from herding together in "Chinatowns" and so force them to observe higher sanitary conditions, this would be vastly improved.

"For myself," Dr. Johnston said, "I feel that a great moral responsibility is facing us as a country and as a church. I have asked myself whether our Christianity and civilization are what they should be if we cannot welcome to this illimitable land of ours with its exhaustless resources these crowded but multitudes of an older civilization."

The most serious danger in Dr. Johnston's opinion is that the question may be made a 'political one. "I believe," he added, "that in the opinion of many of the most thoughtful of the people of the coast, the total exclusion of the Oriental would be regarded as a short-sighted policy."

In spite of travel that covered some ten thousand miles and engagements that fully occupied his time, Dr. Johnston is in the best of health. He will resume his work at once and will occupy his own pulpit in the American Presbyterian Church next Sabbath.

British Firms Rebuilding the Spanish Navy

Madrid, Oct. 9.—British firms will probably be invited to undertake the supervision of the construction of a new navy for Spain in the Spanish Navy yards. A new administrative system is being arranged. The commanders of the Ferrol and Carthagena Dockyards will be concerned only with military surveillance and the maintenance of order; and at the Admiralty the four existing officers concerned with construction will be replaced. A new post to be filled by a State Mayor, will be the central authority. There will be a second for new construction, machinery, ordnance, etc., a third, to be known as the Director of the Mercantile Marine; and a fourth for other branches of the service.

The vote for new construction will be practically $40,000,000, to be spread over eight years, and to include the improvements of naval bases as well as new construction. The vessels to be laid down after the passing of the act are three battleships of 15,000 tons, costing each $9,000,000; three destroyers of 350 tons displacement and 28 knots speed; twenty-five torpedo boats of 180 tons; and three gunboats of 800 tons, and 18 knots speed. Provision is included for the completion of the two battleships, Reina Regente and Catalunia now in hand. The naval works will include a new dock at Ferrol.

Said to be Princess

Winnipeg, Oct. 9.—Two visitors to the city from the German empire are said to be very much higher rank than is indicated by the register of the hotel which the gentlemen signed. The names of the visitors as shown at the hotel, are Count Franz Hoyos and Count Frederick Hoyos. Last night the visitors were recognized by German gentlemen, now residing temporarily in the city, and it was learned that the rank of count is far below their real rank, that they are Germany Princes, and that they will be the children of their respective principalities. One of the travellers is said to be heir to the Prince of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt and the other the prince of Schwarzburg-Sonderghausen.

Obituary

The many graduates in this city of Trinity College, Toronto, and many ex-pupils of Trinity College School Port Hope, learned with sincere regret yesterday that their old time instructor and friend, Rev. Prof. Jones from Registrar of the college has joined the great silent majority. Most of the "Old Boys" of Port Hope school and especially those of more mature years will remember the frequency with which Prof. Jones used to visit the school and the interest he took in both their studies and sports. Prof. Jones passed away at his college residence on Monday afternoon, after some years of feeble health. The graduates of Trinity College will remember with kindly recollection the unvarying kindness shown them by the former dean. He was educated as a boy at Upper Canada College, afterwards taking a high degree at Trinity. For over 30 years he was Mathematical Professor at the college and was a member of the composition of that well known seat of learning.

"THERE'S A REASON"

HOW CHILDREN ARE QUICKLY STRENGTHENED

Develop Them with Ferrozone, Which Makes Rich Blood, Hardy Muscle, Steady Nerves.

Children brought up on Ferrozone are known by their strong, rugged frames their chubby cheeks and healthful appearance.

Mothers find it an indispensable tonic and body builder, and in thousands of homes no other remedy is used.

EVERY CHILD IMPROVES ON FERROZONE

Mrs. E. Montgomery, of Pittsburg, writes: "A little niece came to visit me, and noticing her pale and haggard looks, I started her on a course of Ferrozone. The change that girl underwent in a few weeks was marvellous. Her appetite chirped up, she had more spirit and strength, and a rosy color came into her cheeks that I never saw there before. I weighed my niece about the time she started to pick up, and in seven weeks she gained almost eight pounds, and just looked the picture of health. I think this should be an example to many mothers, and I hope that others will try Ferrozone for their little boys and girls. I am thoroughly convinced that it is the most strengthening tonic it has my strongest endorsement."

The reason Ferrozone works so beneficially with Ferrozone is that it acts directly on the blood, freeing it of all unhealthy matter, at the same time giving it an additional supply of iron.

This at once results in more strength new spirit and renewed vitality. Just one tablet at meal time works wonders.

Refuse to accept any article the druggist may say is just as good. Get Ferrozone, and the result we guarantee will be satisfactory. Price 50c per box or six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers.

IMPORTANT POSTAL REFORM

It is to be hoped that the statement that the Postmaster-General has decided to reduce the charge on drop letters from two cents to one is correct. Some years ago representations in favor of such a reduction were made to the then Postmaster-General, Sir William Mulock, but he stated that his official advisers saw certain technical difficulties in the way of acceding to the request, and he therefore refused to reduce the rate. Now, if the report we have referred to is correct, those difficulties have either been overcome or they are not regarded as insuperable objects to a change which will undoubtedly be greatly appreciated by the public. The amount of postal matter deposited for delivery to correspondents at the office of mailing should very largely increase under the effect of the reduction, and the postal revenue from that circumstance recoved to a very considerable extent to what it has been in the past.

The argument used by the late Sir Rowland Hill when he urged the adoption of penny postage on all letters, without regard to the distance over which they were to be carried, was that the terminal charges and the cost of delivery were the principal items of expense, and that these were the same whether a letter was carried five or one hundred miles. Before that time postage was fixed on a scale to correspond with the distance over which the letter had to be carried. The uniform rate of postage has now been adopted in nearly every country, and the result has fully borne out the soundness of Sir Rowland Hill's suggestion. It might be urged, therefore, that drop letters should also come within the scope of that system. But we think it will be generally admitted that there is a distinction between that class of mail matter and letters which have to be carried and delivered even if only for a distance of two or three miles, and that there are grounds for the reduction in the rate to one cent.

REFORMS IN CHINA

From time to time the western world has of late been informed that important reforms are impending in China. Only recently it was announced that an imperial edict had been issued instructing the grand council and certain individual statesmen to frame regulations for the establishment of an advisory and deliberate chamber to serve as the foundation of representative government, no date being named for the final change. The creation of a ministry for the discussion of state affairs, it was said, had been decided on, and certain political, financial and administrative reforms were ordered, including compulsory education.

Yesterday came the report from Pekin, via London, that the Empress Dowager has issued a decree declaring the Government of China to be a constitutional monarchy. The aged Empress, who until lately has been regarded as a reactionist, seems to have definitely turned her face toward progress and liberalism, and to have realized that what even Russia has found indispensable may not be impossible for China.

It is the belief of the best authorities on China that if the Empress does not inaugurate a regime of improvement and reconstruction her successor on the throne certainly will, and it is but natural that the pastute old woman, reading the signs of the times, should want to earn a share of the glory which will crown the first constitutional monarch.

The adoption of constitutional methods cannot but prove of vast benefit to China. Hitherto she had lived within herself, trading as little as possible with other countries. Her total foreign trade is less than that of Canada by about $100,000,000 a year, her total imports for 1906 being valued at but $226,000,000. What this vast country and population will do if the people really waken to an active use of their economic resources is mere conjecture. Recently there has been a sudden and silent development of the iron and steel industry of the interior of China that is remarkable. According to a letter from Shanghai, published a couple of weeks ago, the Chinese will be able to supply all the materials needed for the extensive railway systems which have been planned for their country and before the close of 1908 will compete with the western nations in the market for steel products afforded by Japan, the Philippines and other parts of the Far East. There can be no doubt if the introduction of constitutional government in China is attended with the adoption of western business methods and enterprise, that country will yet take a prominent place among the nations of the world.

Suffering in Labrador

Battle Harbor, Labrador, Dec. 9.—Dr. Wilfrid Grenfell, the well-known mission physician, who for the past few months has been cruising on the mission yacht Strathcona along the northern Labrador coast, reports much suffering among the Eskimaux settlements of that district, due to the failure of the fisheries during the season, which ended this week. The native fishermen, except in the north, were fairly successful, but the visiting fleet of several hundred vessels, most of them from Newfoundland, had poor luck. Among the vessels which visited the coast this summer was a German warship, which supplied the Moravian missionaries.

BEDS AND BEDMAKING.

Many False Notions on This Important Subject Exploded.

Many people used to have an impression that to sleep on a soft bed had a spice of wickedness in it and that the harder the mattress the greater the virtue of the sleeper.

This arose in great part from the fact that feather beds were generally condemned as unhealthy, and the ignorant at once seized the idea that they were unhealthy because soft, whereas they are unhealthy because they do not permit of proper ventilation.

More and more we learn that the foundation of health lies in an abundant supply of fresh air and that the root of many a disease is in the want of it. In health many of us spend a third of our time actually in bed and in sickness much more, so it is of the greatest importance that the bed and everything connected with it should be thoroughly ventilated.

It goes without saying that the bedroom must itself be airy and the fresh air have free access to it.

From the point of view of health it is a matter of indifference whether the bedstead be of wood or of iron, but the most comfortable and at the same time healthy are those fitted with chain spring mattresses. These mattresses may be bought separately and fitted to any bedstead.

AIDS TO BEAUTY.

Small white spots which often appear on the nails are caused from bruising.

Thin arms should be washed twice a day with a fine lather of soap, rinsed well, dried thoroughly and then rubbed vigorously. This treatment will bring the pores into action and induce a healthy condition of the skin.

It is nonsense to think that soap and water and a complexion brush will cause a growth of hair on the face. Superfluous hair is more likely to grow on a dust laden, oily skin. Soap, hot water and a complexion brush used every night are necessary to get the face clean. A good cream will counteract the drying effects of the soap.

First Aid Valise.

Are you thinking of taking a number of youngsters on a vacation, or are you off for a motor trip?

If you are you need a first aid valise. This is the latest production of those purveyors who are always inventing something useful for the motorist. It is a small but very useful receptacle of remedies for bruises, cuts and other ills that may, alas, befall the traveler on automobile.

Rolls of lint, flasks of cooling and healing lotions, scissors, a small bottle of brandy and other items of first aid utility are contained in a little leather box, the color of which must be determined by the lining of the car. Of course it may serve on any sort of a jaunt.

Peppermint Candy.

Sugar, one cup; flavoring, one teaspoonful; water, a quarter cup. Boil water and sugar seven or eight minutes. Take off the stove and add the peppermint flavoring. Stir briskly with a large spoon until quite thick. Then pour into a well buttered pan and set on the ice to cool.

To check a cold quickly, get from your druggist some little Candy Cold Tablets called Preventics. Druggists everywhere are now dispensing Preventics, for they are not only safe, but decidedly certain and prompt. Preventics contain no Quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh nor sickening. Taken at the first sneeze Preventics will prevent Pneumonia, Bronchitis, La Grippe, etc. Hence the name, Preventics. Good for feverish children. 25 Preventics in a vest pocket tin. Price 5 cents. Sold by all druggists.

SELECTIONS

The Shepherd And His Flock.

It is not suggested that the beginner in sheep husbandry should stock his farm with pure bred sheep. It will be necessary to begin with whatever class of ewes may be found most available, choosing rams of some pure bred and adding also a few pure bred ewes of the same breed. The hills of Pennsylvania contain already a good many ewes largely of Merino foundation, and these will form an excellent basis for a grade flock when crossed with desirable types of rams. A little to the south in West Virginia there are many ewes to be had, and a peculiar type of hill sheep. These ewes may be somewhat leggy and bare of wool, but they mostly prove very serviceable mothers for early lambs; and when mated with a good sire the results will prove quite satisfactory.

In Ohio there are great numbers of sheep of the Merino type, and these Ohio sheep will form an admirable basis for a grade flock. Next, it is astonishing how good many of the sheep of the ranges are today, having greater size than eastern Merinos, shearing heavy fleeces and having good, vigorous constitutions and no parasites when they leave the range. These range ewes may often be bought very reasonably in Chicago in the fall. It requires some care to get the right class. However, by careful selection after receiving the ewes they may be assorted so that any that are wrong in any way may be fattened and the suitable ones retained to breed. It is wise in buying these western ewes on the market to choose the type free from wrinkles or excessively greasy pelts, and sometimes they may be had with an infusion of Cotswold or Shropshire blood, which makes them all the more valuable for the farm purpose. The inexperienced shepherd should avoid lambs or yearlings, and no one should from choice buy ewes past four years. The young ewes that have never lambed are certain to give more or less trouble at their first lambing.—Pennsylvania Bulletin.

Wonderful Mutton Form.

The ram in the picture, held by Dan Taylor, who is known as a shepherd wherever sheep are shown in this country, is Wardwell's Tryzull Champion. He is now two years old and is used as a sire this year. He was grand champion and won the silver cup at the Michigan state fair last year. He has just been shorn, and the picture shows his wonderful mutton form, broad chest and beautiful head.

Henry L. Wardwell of New York state, writing to Country Gentleman, says he selected this ram last year as the best he saw in England, and he expects Tryzull to prove a wonder.

Feeding Lambs Higher in Price.

Reports from the ranges indicate that feeding lambs are being contracted for October delivery at $5 to $5.50 per hundred pounds. A few contracts have been made around $3 per head, but this included cows as well as lambs. These prices are said to be 25 cents to 50 cents higher than a year ago. Buyers are not buying as liberally as a year ago, and the indications are that there will be a larger business on the open market in Denver than last year, many feeders preferring to take their chances on the market while conditions are as at present. The outlook is for cheap hay, with a big crop of grain and probably a large corn crop. Under these conditions feeders are more inclined to take chances, but prices are so high that many feeders have already commenced plans to feed cattle.—Record-Stockman.

Feed For Late Summer Pigs.

In answer to the question "What is the best ration for late summer pigs (July and August) through the winter when intending to have them ready for the market about the 1st of April or May? William Dietrich of Illinois says in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago: The best ration for late summer pigs as well as pigs of any other season is that which furnishes the proper amount of protein, carbohydrates and bulk. A pig has only one stomach, and this a comparatively small one, therefore it is not adapted to roughages and must be fed largely on concentrated feeds. However, if a pig under five or six months of age is given a full ration of concentrated feeds it will invariably eat too much. Therefore the ration for pigs of this age should either be limited or else should contain a sufficient quantity of a roughage like clover, alfalfa or wheat bran, so that the digestible nutrients will be limited to the proper amount. Carbohydrates may be obtained from corn. Protein may be obtained from such feeds as skim milk, soy beans, cowpeas, clover, alfalfa, and if one chooses to patronize commercial feed dealers he may use tankage, oilmeal, wheat middlings and to a slight extent wheat bran.

Lincoln and Stanton.

There was a marked contrast between Lincoln's manner, which was always pleasant and even genial, and that of Stanton. The latter's stern, overbearing manner commanded instant respect and in many cases inspired fear. In receiving visitors, and they were legion, Stanton seldom or never sat down, but stood before a high desk as the crowd passed before him and one by one presented their requests or complaints, which were rapidly disposed of. He was haughty, severe, domineering and often rude. When I think of him in the daily routine of his public audiences the characterization of Hugoleon by Charles Phillips, the Irish orator, comes to mind, "Grand, gloomy and peculiar."—David Homer Bates in Century.

Gambling in Church.

The mania for gambling will out, no matter how carefully hedged about by the law. Here is an illustration:

"It took a conversation I overheard at the close of the church service last Sunday night to bring me to a realization of the virulence of the betting fever," said a Harlem woman. "I actually heard two boys betting on the skill of the sexton in snuffing out the candles. One bet 25 cents that he would extinguish each candle at the first application of the snuffers, the other that he wouldn't. I had been watching the proceedings with the same thought in mind, but it never occurred to me to bet on the outcome."

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2000 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity tramway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2430 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these, running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 70 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It's for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

All promotion stock pooled during the sale of this treasury stock.

Messrs. Thos. Patterson & Co., Peterborough, Ont.,

On to Willow Creek!

Recent discoveries at Willow Creek, in the Greenwater Copper region, have caused a rush of excited miners. The Baltic strike and other explorations of neighboring ground are unquestionably authentic. We have identically the same indications on our Providence group, located near the mouth of Willow Creek. Water is plentiful but transportation hitherto has been difficult. Now the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad has extended into Death Valley, and Willow Creek is attracting capital, and the town of that name contains a thousand souls.

THE GUGGENHEIM-GREENWATER COPPER COMPANY

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

In the closely shaded room Maddy could see nothing distinctly, but she heard Jessie's reply: "Because the plastering comes down so low, and Maddy's pillows are so teenty, not much bigger than my dolly's. But I love her; don't you, doctor"

Through the darkness the doctor caught the sudden flash of Maddy's eyes, and something impelled him to lay his cool, broad hand on her forehead, as he replied, "I love all my patients"; then, taking Jessie's arm, he led her out to where Guy was waiting for her.

CHAPTER VI.

Had it not been for the presence of Dr. Holbrook, who accepting Guy's invitation to tea, rode back with him to Aikenside, Mrs. Agnes would have gone off into a passion when told that Jessie had been "exposed to fever and mercy knows what."

"There's no telling what one will catch among the very poor," she said to Dr. Holbrook, as she clasped and unclasped the heavy gold bracelets flashing on her white, round arm.

"I'll be answerable for any disease Jessie caught at Mrs. Markham's," the doctor replied.

"At Mr. Who's? What did you call him?" Agnes asked, the bright color on her cheek fading as the doctor replied:

"Markham—an old man who lives in Honedale. You never knew him, of course."

Involuntarily Agnes glanced at Guy, in whose eye there was, as she fancied, a peculiar expression. Could it be he knew the secret she guarded so carefully? Impossible, she said to herself; but still the white fingers trembled as she handled the china and silver, and for once she was glad when the doctor took his leave, and she was alone with Jessie.

"What was that girl's name?" she asked, "the one you went to see?"

"Maddy, mother—Madeline Clyde. She's so pretty. I'm going to see her again. May I?"

Agnes did not reply directly, but continued to question the child with regard to the cottage which Jessie thought so funny, slanting away back, she said, so that the roof on one side almost touched the ground. The window panes, too, were so very tiny, and the room where Maddy lay sick was small and low.

"Yes, yes, I know," Agnes said at last, impatiently, weary of hearing of the cottage whose humble exterior and interior she knew so much better than Jessie herself.

But this was not to be divulged; for surely the haughty Agnes Remington, who, in Boston, aspired to lead in society into which, as the wife of Dr. Remington, she had been admitted, and who, in Aikenside, was looked upon with envy, could have nothing in common with the red cottage or its inmates. So when Jessie asked again if she could not visit Maddy on the morrow, she answered decidedly: "No, daughter, no. I do not wish you to associate with such people," and when Jessie insisted on knowing why she must not associate with such people as Maddy Clyde, the answer was: "Because you are a Remington," and as if this of itself were an unanswerable objection, Agnes sent her child from her, refusing to talk longer on a subject so disagreeable to her and so suggestive of the past. It was all in vain that Jessie, and even Guy himself, tried to revoke the decision. Jessie should not be permitted to come in contact with that kind of people, she said, or incur the risk of catching that dreadful fever.

So day after day, while life and health were slowly throbbing through her veins, Maddy waited and longed for the little girl whose one visit to her sick room seemed so much like a dream. From her grandfather she had heard the good news of Guy Remington's generosity, and that, quite as much as Dr. Holbrook's medicines, helped to bring the color back to the pallid cheek and the brightness to her eyes.

She was asleep the first time the doctor came after the occasion of Jessie's visit, and as sleep, he said, would do her more good than anything he might prescribe, he did not awaken her; but for a long time, as it seemed to Grandma Markham, who stood very little in awe of the Boston doctor, he watched her as she slept, now clasping the blue-veined wrist as he felt for the pulse, and now wiping from her forehead the drops of sweat, or pushing back her soft, damp hair. It would be three days before he could see her again, for a sick father in Cambridge needed his attention, and after numerous directions as to the administering of sundry powders and pills, he left her, feeling that the next three days would be long ones to him. Dr. Holbrook did not stop to analyze the nature of his interest in Maddy Clyde—an interest so different from any he had ever felt before for his patients; and even if he had sought to solve the riddle, he would have said that the knowing how he had wronged her was the sole cause of his thinking far more of her and of her case than of the thirty other patients on his list. Dr. Holbrook was a handsome man, a thorough scholar, and a most skillful physician; but ladies who expected from him those little polite attentions which the sex value so highly, generally expected in vain, for he was no ladies' man, and his language and manners were oftentimes abrupt, even when both were prompted by the utmost kindness of heart. In his organization, too, there was not a quick perception of what would be exactly appropriate, and so, when, at last, he was about starting to visit Maddy again, he puzzled his brains until they fairly ached with wondering what he could do to give her a pleasant surprise and show that he was not as formidable a personage as her past experience might lead her to think.

"If I could only take her something," he said, glancing ruefully around his office. "Now, if she were Jessie, nuts and raisins might answer but she must not eat such trash as that," and he set himself to think again, just as Guy Remington rode up, bearing in his hand a most exquisite bouquet, whose fragrance filled the medicine-odored office at once, and whose beauty elicited an exclamation of delight even from the matter-of-fact Dr. Holbrook.

"I thought you might be going down to Honedale, as I knew you returned last night, so I brought these flowers for your patient with my compliments, or if you prefer I give them to you, and you can thus present them as if coming from yourself."

"As if I would do that," the doctor answered, taking the bouquet in his hand the better to examine and admire it. "Did you arrange it, or your gardener?" he asked, and when Guy replied that the merit of arrangement, if merit there were, belonged to himself, he began to deprecate his own awkwardness and want of tact. "Here I have been cudgeling my head this half-hour trying to think what I could take her as a peace offering, and could think of nothing, while you—— Well, you and I are different entirely. You know just what is proper—just what to say, and when to say it—while I am a perfect bore, and without doubt shall make some ludicrous blunder in delivering the flowers. To-day will be the first time really that we meet, as she was sleeping when I was there last, while on all other occasions she has paid no attention whatever to me."

For a moment Guy regarded his friend attentively, noticing now that extra care had been bestowed upon his toilet, that the collar was fresh from the laundry, and the new cravat tied in a most unexceptionable manner, instead of being twisted into a hard knot, with the ends looking as if they had been chewed.

Stomach troubles, Heart and Kidney ailments can be quickly corrected with a prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Women In Burma.

It is a remarkable fact that Burma differs from almost all other oriental countries in the freedom accorded to its women. They stand in every way almost on an equality with men. In share equally with boys in all inheritance.

An Old Marriage Notice.

There were some very candid persons in the time of George II. In 1731 the Gentleman's Magazine announced "Married, the Rev. Mr. Roger Waina of York, about twenty-six years of age to a Lincolnshire lady upward of eighty, with whom he is to have £8,000 in money, £300 per annum and a coach and four during his life only."

Fasting Animals.

Animals are often able to bear very protracted fasting. In the Italian earthquakes of 1795 two hogs were buried in the ruins of a building. They were taken out alive forty-two days later, but very lean and weak.

Public Horse Baths.

In Guadalajara, Mexico, there are public horse baths, where the animals thoroughly enjoy swimming after the day's heat and dust. After the bath the horses are given a thorough scrubbing and rubdown in the shallow, shady part of the pool.

The Death Column.

In the ruins of Mitla, Mexico, is the Death Column. The Indians say they can tell the number of years a person will live by the number of spans between his finger tips when he embraces the column.

Spanish Peanuts.

The only province in Spain where peanuts are produced is Valencia. There are two different sorts, one containing two nuts probably known in America as Spanish peanuts and the other containing three or four unknown in England as "giants." The first class is by far the most common and cheapest.

Eclipses.

Solar eclipses were noted by the Egyptians as far back as 951 B. C. The first eclipse recorded in history was of the moon by Ptolemy, who gives it as taking place March 19, 721 B. C.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it unfailingly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those small-like granular wastes found in Rheumatic Blood seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy, as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer, without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend Regarding Baths.

When the body is fatigued or the brain has been overtaxed by excessive mental work, it is very wrong to take a cold bath. Such a bath exhausts, and if we add this to the already weak state of the body the result seems rejuvenating for the moment, but very soon the tension becomes too great and the body cannot be forced to do more work. A warm bath is the only kind to be applied when one wishes to recover from fatigue, and the longer in reason a tired body remains in a bath of, say, 70 degrees the quieter become the strained nerves and the easier follows the sought for rest.

Thanksgiving.

The Thanksgiving proclamation was originated by Sir Francis Bernard, captain general and governor in chief in and over his majesty's province of Massachusetts Bay. It was issued Nov. 4, 1767, and the form then used has been substantially adhered to ever since.

Reindeer Skin.

The skin of the reindeer is so impervious to the cold that any one clothed in such a dress, with the addition of a blanket of the same material, may bear the intensest rigors of an arctic winter's night.

Cyclopean Building.

The best examples of cyclopean building are at Baalbec. There are stones in the Baalbec walls thirty feet above the level, several of which are sixty feet long, twenty-four feet thick and sixteen broad, each stone weighing over 2,500 tons, all cut, dressed and brought from distant quarries.

Deaf Mute Instruction.

The first mention of the instruction of a deaf mute is in the writings of Bede, about 685. A Spanish Benedictine monk, Pedro de Ponce, taught the deaf and dumb about 1580.

Cocoanut Trees.

The cocoanut tree is the most valuable of plants. Its wood furnishes beams, rafters and planks; its leaves, umbrellas and clothing; its fruit, food, oil, intoxicants and sugar; its shells domestic utensils; its fibers, ropes, sails and mattins.

Mustard Cures.

Mustard is the nearest approach to a universal cure-all. Few pains will give way before a mustard plaster. A wide range of internal inflammation from colds and other causes can be stopped by its timely application. It is the first and best resort in the attempt to nip pneumonia, congestion of the lungs, determined colds on the chest.

White Ants.

The termites, or white ants, steal to store grain. As much as five bushels of grain have been taken from an ant heap.

Vice-President ..... JUDGE CHAS. L. HAYES,
Mine Owner and Leading Attorney of Goldfield, Nevada
Secretary and Treasurer ..... ADAMS F. BROWN,

Depository ..... JOHN S. COOK & CO.
Bank of Goldfield, Nevada.

The company owns 4 claims (80 acres) of some of the best proved mining land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 fraction claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna), the richest in the world; and the Broadway and Beauty fraction claims situated three and one-half miles south of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bond and Dyer Mines near the Zeon group in the Diamondfield section, second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made on the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing fraction claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,540 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and by several crosscuts all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this Bonanza Mine.

Stock will be listed as soon as feasible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. We therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient so to do.

What Many Men Need

Dr. Hamilton Has a Prescription That "Sets" You Right Up.

When a man has lost ambition to "dig in" and stay at things—when he complains of headache, fullness in the right side, pains in the shoulder blade—it's purely a case of liver.

These symptoms invariably indicate a clogged, inactive liver. The body can't get rid of its wastes, and the whole system is half paralyzed.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills stimulate the liver into activity in one night. Being a mild vegetable laxative they produce results in a few hours. The bilious headache and constipation are cured, spirits rise, complexion clears, animation returns. Nothing in the calendar so efficient for that tired lazy feeling as Dr Hamilton's Pills. Very mild, don't interfere with work, invariably do lots of good. Try a 25c box, all dealers.

Big Meeting of Citizens

assessment in the past has been altogether too low; the main object of the assessors is and should be to place the burden of taxation equally upon the shoulders of all.

Mrs. J. J. Turner believed the manner in which Mr. McKee has valued property in the south end of the town will drive people away from Peterborough. He raised his assessments in his store occupied by Mr. Green from $1600 to $2,000, an increase of $1,000 for putting on a coat of paint. Then Mr. Greene's business tax has been increased from $250 to $900, and a tea retailer occupying another of Mr. Turner's stores has been assessed $1500 for business tax.

Mr. R. E. Layfield said that in taking 25 of the same class of buildings in both wards he found that the increase in assessment this year in ward one is 18 3-4 per cent. over that for 1906, and 44 per cent. increase in ward three. Why this difference. Mr. Layfield also knew of one building which had been increased in assessment ov 82 1-2 per cent.

In conclusion Mr. Layfield offered that this year's assessment should be discarded and that of last year adopted.

Mr. John Carlisle contended that Mr. McKee had told people that he had been authorized to raise the assessment to the present basis.

Mr. McKee denied this.

A voice—"You said you were going to assess ward one and ward two up to $3,000,000."

Mr. McKee also denied this."

The president here pointed out that the assessors have no control whatever over the business assessment, different classes of business must be assessed at a fixed per cent. basis of the value of the land.

Father McColl did not think an assessment commissioner with others working under him could make an equable assessment. He thought the only fair way to arrive at an equal assessment in all wards would be for two men to work together throughout the whole city, and if one would not work with the other he should not be engaged. But it is quite evident that the basis of assessment for all wards must be the same, or people will be leaving the city.

Mr. D. Hughes Charles thought it a great mistake for the council to have separated the assessors; the only manner in which to assess the city evenly and fairness to all is to have the two assessors work together. While on his residence in ward four there was only $150 to come and go on in the assessment made by Mr. McGrath, the business assessment on the Bank of Commerce had been increased fourfold by Mr. McKee, and he failed to see that his business had increased proportionately.

Mrs. McKee here responded and asserted that he had only assessed at what he honestly considered to be actual values. Heretofore many properties had been assessed far below their actual values and the raising of all properties to, and present actual values will be the means next year of reaching a good and equable assessment.

Mr. R. Sheehy said he would like to know how Mr. McKee arrived at an increase of 50 per cent. in values.

Mr. W. H. Moore offered that for this year there will be found no reduction in the assessment in wards one and two on any ward. The censure for the whole trouble must be laid upon the whole City Council who made an awful blunder in separating the assessors because Mr. McKee refused to confer with Mr. McGrath, which has resulted in an unequal assessment in the two divisions of the city.

Assessor McGrath offered that the separation of he and Mr. McKee was a childish action for which no reason had existed. They both have been brought up and lived in the city together all their lives, and never had as much as one cross word passed between them. And when they worked together they got along amicably and in perfect harmony.

The resolution above quoted here was voted on and carried, and the meeting adjourned.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

THE DAILY TASK.

Dreading a Duty Doubles the Task of Discharging It.

A small boy whose one task for the day consists in bringing a pail of spring water to the house began to pine away, and his anxious mamma called in the family doctor. The boy submitted listlessly to a thorough examination, the result of which puzzled the man of medicine. "Does he eat well?" he asked. "Fairly so," was the reply. "And sleep?" he queried. "Oh, yes, but he drags through the day without a symptom of interest," was the mother's reply.

The doctor looked long and hard at the child and then had a bright thought. "What does he do in the way of work?" he asked. "Nothing but bring a pail of water from the spring every morning." "Cut out that water carrying task for a week," said the doctor, "and let me know the result."

The week worked a miracle in Willie's health. The boy had been weighted down by the thought of a daily task, and it was not because he was lazy. He did other things with the greatest willingness, but he so detested that one monotonous task that it affected his health. There are many grownups like Willie, indulging a distaste for necessary duties to the extent of clouding the sunshine of life.

Dreading a duty doubles the task of discharging it. There are a few wise persons in the world who resolutely attack disagreeable tasks and clear them out of the way before they get troublesome. Watch a woman who sits down to an unwelcome task of darning hosiery. She looks over the articles and spends her first strength on the small rents, leaving the large ones till she begins to get weary. Beginning with the big ones, she would finish comparatively easy. This is the usual feminine method of working. Men who amount to anything attack the heavy work and clear the way to easier things, and when the decks are clear they heave a sigh of satisfaction, something a woman never does.

A WOMAN PRIZE WINNER.

Miss Hanscom Will Design Emblem For the Alaska Exposition.

The latest woman to distinguish herself in competition, not only with her sisters, but in a free for all struggle wherein her abilities were pitted against man's as well as woman's, is Miss Adelaide Hanscom of Seattle, Wash. Miss Hanscom has been awarded the $500 prize offered for the best design for an official emblem for the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, which will be held in Seattle in 1909.

Several hundred designs were submitted, many of which showed decided ability, but none of them so well expressed the purpose and meaning of the exposition as that prepared by Miss Hanscom. Her drawing shows three female figures framed in a circle. The figure to the right typifies the Pacific slope, with right hand extended in welcome and the left holding a train of cars representing commerce by land. The figure to the left represents the orient, and the ship in her hand represents commerce by sea. The central figure in white is that of Alaska, the white representing the north, and the nuggets in her hands representing her vast mineral resources.

'Across the sky in the background is seen the aurora borealis so vivid in the north. The purple background with the many colors of the northern lights makes a rich coloring. At the side of the figure on the right are tall trees, typical of the immense forests of the territory represented by the exposition.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

Never stir cake after final beating. Beating motion should always be last used.

When interrupted while frying in deep fat, drop a crust of dry bread into the fat to prevent its burning.

When the time for cooking vegetables is limited, pour boiling water over them, then drain and cook in the usual way.

When frying croquettes be sure to plunge the basket in hot fat before the croquettes are placed in it. This will prevent their adhering to the wire when lifted out.

When roasting meat, to make the gravy nice and brown, take a tablespoonful of sugar and melt it in a pan till it smokes, then add boiling water, stir well and mix with the gravy.

Cracker or bread crumbs used in covering the tops of scallops, etc., should be well greased in melted butter. This makes a better covering than the dry crumbs dotted with butter and uses less of the latter ingredient.

In New Zealand.

In New Zealand the house of representatives has just voted 337 to 26 in favor of making women eligible as members of the upper House. In Australia women are already eligible to all offices from prime minister down, but when New Zealand fourteen years ago gave women full suffrage it expressly debarred them from parliament. This restriction, it seems, is now to be removed.

A Novel Jelly Idea.

When using eggs break away just enough of the smaller end of the shell to enable you to remove the contents. Wash the shells carefully, then put them away in some safe place. At jelly making time fill these shells with jelly, covering the broken end with paraffin paper. It is impossible to imagine a more convenient way to carry jelly.—Delineator.

A damp cloth dipped in salt will remove egg stains from silver or tea stains from china dishes.

Making Good.

There is no way of making lasting friends like "Making Good;" and Doctor Pierce's medicines well exemplify this, and their friends, after more than two decades of popularity, are numbered by the hundreds of thousands. They have "made good" and they have not made drunkards.

A good, honest, square-deal medicine of known composition is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It still enjoys an immense sale, while most of the preparations that have come into prominence in the earlier period of its popularity have "gone by the board" and are never more heard of. There must be some reason for this long-time popularity and that is to be found in its superior merits. When once given a fair trial for weak stomach, or for liver and blood affections, its superior curative qualities are soon manifest; hence it has survived and grown in popular favor, while scores of less meritorious articles have suddenly flashed into favor for a brief period and then been as soon forgotten.

For a torpid liver with its attendant indigestion, dyspepsia, headache, perhaps dizziness, foul breath, nasty coated tongue, with bitter taste, loss of appetite, with distress after eating, nervousness and debility, nothing is so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It's an honest, square-deal medicine with all its ingredients printed on bottle-wrapper—no secret, no hocus-pocus humbug, therefore don't accept a substitute that the dealer may possibly make a little bigger profit. Insist on your right to have what you call for.

Don't buy Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription expecting it to prove a "cure-all." It is only advised for woman's special ailments. It makes weak women strong and sick women well. Less advertised than some preparations sold for like purposes, its sterling curative virtues still maintain its position in the front ranks, where it stood over two decades ago. As an invigorating tonic and strengthening nervine it is unequaled. It won't satisfy those who want "booze," for there is not a drop of alcohol in it.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, the original Little Liver Pills, although the first pill of their kind in the market, still lead, and when once tried are ever afterwards in favor. Easy to take as candy—one to three a dose. Much imitated but never equaled.

Were Not Delegates of Association

It seems that the eight ministers of the Gospel who occupied front seats in the police court Monday morning were not there as delegates from, or members of the local Ministerial Association, but simply each and every one in his private capacity as a pastor. At yesterday's police court only one pastor was noticed present.

Have Class "C" York Loan Shareholders First Claim on All Securities? Certificates Amount to $300,000

Toronto, Oct. 9.—At ten o'clock this morning before Mr. George Kappele, the winding-up proceedings in the case of the York County Loan and Savings Company were continued. The matter of Class C certificates was brought up. These certificates have a notice printed on the face of them which gives the holders "a first charge on all the securities of the company." The position which the liquidators assume in the matter is that the notice printed on the face of the certificates makes them practically debentures, and they maintain that the company had no right to issue debentures. As the amount of these certificates is in the neighborhood of $300,000, the result of this issue is awaited anxiously by the holders of other classes of certificates, because on it depends largely the amount each holder of other classes of certificates will receive when the affairs have been wound-up.

Mr. A. W. Briggs this morning presented the position of the holders of the Class C certificates. He submitted the first part of his formal evidence, which included extracts from the by-laws of the company, which authorized the issuing of the special class certificates, and also all notices of meetings of shareholders and directors confirming the bylaws in point. Tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock Mr. Briggs will submit the remainder of the formal evidence, after which the argument will be proceeded with. Tomorrow morning at ten o'clock Mr. Biggar of Hamilton, will present the position of classes 5 and 6. These classes are rather indefinite, it being a question as to whether the stock has been converted into cash, and and also as to whether the holders of these certificates are creditors or shareholders.

Lewis Captured Picking Pockets

Man Released at Peterborough Now In New York State Prison

It will be remembered that when the four pickpockets, Phelps, Goldfarb, Bradfield and Lewis, were tried here for picking pockets on circus day, last summer, that the first three were sentenced to 18 months each in the Central Prison, Toronto, and that Lewis was discharged for lack of sufficient evidence. Now Lewis is again within the strong arms of the law, having been caught and convicted of picking pockets at Albany, N.Y. He was given one year in the States' prison. Well, perhaps its as cheap to let the State of New York pay his board for the year as for the Province of Ontario to board him for a year and a half.

Police Court

A twelve-year-old boy named William Tibault was charged, at yesterday's police court, with using grossly insulting language towards a little girl named Annie Hamilton on Thursday last. Tebault pleaded not guilty.

Norman Russell swore that Tibault told his little brother to say the bad words and the little Russell boy also said that Tebault told him to say them. The defendant's grandfather stated that the boy was out driving with him when the words were used.

His worship enlarged the case until this morning in order to bring another witness to court. He said that he intended to see the matter to a finish.

SEGOND GAME OF WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY CUBS

Tremendous Crowd Witness Game at West Side Park Chicago Yesterday Afternoon--Chicago Wins by 3 to 1

Chicago, Oct. 9.—Yesterday's enormous crowd of baseball enthusiasts was outnumbered by the thousands who gathered to see the second of the series between the Detroit Tigers and the Chicago Cubs for the championship of the world. Long before noon traffic was blocked in the vicinity of West Side Park, and the seats in the park were black with an expectant humanity three hours before the game was scheduled to start. There was great excitement, and everybody was on edge for another great struggle.

The teams lined up as follows:

Schaefer, 2b. Schekard, rf.

Detroit—Jones, l.f., Schaefer, 2b; Crawford, rf; Cobb, rf; Rossman, 1b, Coughlin, 3b; Payne, C; Cleary, ss; Mullin, p.

Chicago—Slagle, cf; Scheckard, lf; Chance, 1b; Steinfeldt, 3b; Kling, c; Ewers, 2b; Schulte, rf; Tinker, ss; Reulbach, p.

Umpires—Sheridan and O'Day.

Chicago carried the game, the score at the finish being 3—1. Detroit getting their only run in the second innings.

Warm Time at the B. of H. Meeting.

Yesterday the Board of Health met in their usual assembly room and it must be confessed that the meeting was not a case of "Little birds agreeing in their nests." The meeting was hot, red hot; the table was thumped and expressions were cast aboard that did not savor of christian charity. This however was only in the heat of argument and, to use a current expression "cut no ice." The main bones of contention seemed to have been picked by Chairman Eyres and Medical Health Officer Dr. Bingham, and between Mr. Neil and Sanitary Inspector Ball.

The cause of this scarletina ylagged war was the placing of the girl suffering with scarlet fever in the city building.

Mr. Eyres practically moved that the placing of the scarlet fever patient in the city buildings was done entirely by the medical health officer; that the chairman of the board had protested against any such action being taken, and that if should go on the minutes of the board that the board disclaimed all responsibility for the steps that had been taken.

Dr. Bingham said that he and Mr. Eyres had tried to find a suitable vacant building wherein to locate the patient. He said further that Mr. Eyres agreed to the use of the city building.

Mr. Eyres here asserted that this place was all right but it would be contrary to law.

Some further words between the chairman and the M.H.O. then were heard.

The mayor explained the circumstances that had led up to the girl being placed in the city hall room, as far as he was cognisant of them, to his office, with Mr. Eyres and Dr. Bingham both present, the chairman of the board had refused to accept any responsibility for placing the patient in the room, but had uttered no word of protest. The medical health officer said he would accept all responsibility for the action and the mayor told it was his (Dr. Bingham's) business and to go ahead and do what he thought was right.

At this point Dr. Burnham read a letter that had been received from Dr. Hodgetts, of the Provincial Board of Health, to the effect that complaints had been made from Peterborough to the Provincial Board that the law had been broken in this city by locating a scarlet fever patient closer to an inhabited dwelling than allowed by law. Dr. Bodgetts wants to know what the city intends to do.

Dr. McNulty, after both Mayor McWilliams and Dr. Bingham had spoken, explained the patient had been taken from her former home because a wife and some six children lived there.

Then Sanitary Inspector Ball, exasperated, said that, even though his job were gone, he had placed notices on poor men's houses and no one was taken from such places. He thought the girl was taken away because poor and a Roman Catholic. He wanted to know why an exception was made between this case and that of a member of Mr. Neil's family.

A hot cross-fire then took place between Mr. Ball and Mr. Neill.

Mr. Eyres said he did not know the girl's religion.

The mayor moved, seconded by Dr. McNulty, that the clerk be instructed to place in the minutes of the meeting that the medical health officer accepts the full responsibility for the placing of a scarlet fever patient in the top floor of the city buildings.—Carried.

Dr. Bingham said he was quite satisfied if Mr. Eyres would agree not to say that one case of fever made an epidemic and the chairman advised him not to say too much.

Adjournment then took place.

Carries War Insurance

London, Oct. 9.—The interpolation which Europe places upon the power of sending the American battleship fleet to the Pacific received its first practical application this week.

A large steamship flying the Japanese flag is to sail from Antwerp to join the new line from San Francisco to Japan. She carries considerable cargo, and the shippers horrified the owners of the vessel that they would withdraw the shipment unless the vessel and cargo were insured against war-risks. This had been done at considerable expense.

Chicago Pastors Don Disguise and Find Their Erring Flock

Methodists Frequenters of Summer Parks to Drink Beer

Trapped by Their Spiritual Advisers in the Very Act

Chicago, Oct. 10.—How three Methodist ministers, disguised as "hoboes" and plain citizens gumshoed their way thru a Woodlawn amusement park and found women, and even members of their own congregation drinking liquor, was the story told by Rev. R. E. Crawford to his congregation last night.

From other pulpits came a denunciation of President Roosevelt for his drinking champagne at the St. Louis banquet last week.

Mr. Crawford was one of a preachers' committee of three appointed by the Methodist preachers' conference to investigate the big amusement parks adjacent to Woodlawn. This is the story he told to his congregation last night:

"Hardly had we entered when I met a woman of my congregation, who blushed and hurried past. A few steps farther on I ran plump into a man of my congregation. He made haste to explain how he happened to be there, and I with burning face, did the same. Thompson looked like a veritable tough, and the man looked so suspiciously at him that I knew he thought I lied.

"We had hoped to find the people at seemingly innocent amusements. There were not enough riding in the little choo-choo cars to run a 10 cent show a month. Same with the others we consented to class as innocent. At last we came to a show where the barker was telling about the mysterious lady in red inside. A small knot of people were watching half a dozen girls in abbreviated costumes, both at top and bottom, kick up their heels and sing. I wouldn't go in, and Thompson refused and the committee passed on.

"We found the crowd. Where? Under a pavilion, where there were hundreds of people sitting about at small tables drinking liquor. I saw one child not more than 4 years old sipping the stuff. There were as many women as men, and they had beer as well. It was shocking to find at the gates of prohibition Woodlawn so much drinking."

She Quit

But It Was a Hard Pull

It is hard to believe that coffee will put a person in such a condition as it did a woman of Apple Creek, O. She tells her own story:

"I did not believe coffee caused my trouble, and frequently said I liked it and well I would not, and could not quit drinking it, but I was a miserable sufferer from heart trouble and nervous prostration for four years.

"I was scarcely able to be around, had no energy and did not care for anything. Was emaciated and had a constant pain around my heart until I thought I could not endure it. For months I never went to bed expecting to get up in the morning. It felt as though I was liable to die at any time.

"Frequently I had nervous chills and the least excitement would drive sleep away, and any little noise would upset me terribly. I was gradually getting worse until finally one time it came over me and I asked myself what's the use of being sick all the time and buying medicine so that I could indulge myself in coffee.

"Not I thought I could see if I could quit drinking coffee and got some Postum to help me quit. I made it strictly according to directions and I want to tell you, that change was the greatest step in my life. It was easy to quit coffee because I had the Postum which I now like better than the old coffee. One by one the old troubles left, until I am now in splendid health, nerves steady, heart all right and the pain all gone. Never have any more nervous chills, don't take any medicine, can do all my housework and have done a great deal besides.

Hugh Jennings the Greatest Oriole of Them All

The following report was received yesterday from an old Peterborough boy, who is well versed on the great American game, as follows:

The baseball season of 1907 has proved what a wonderful team was the old Baltimore Orioles, three times winners of National League pennants. John McGraw was the first one of this famous team to come into the lime light. That was in 1905 when as manager of the New York Giants, he brought the National League pennant to the American metropolis, and then administered the only defeat the American League has yet sustained in a world's championship series. But McGraw's task was comparatively easy as compared with what his two former team mates Kelley and Jennings have accomplished this year. Joe Kelley indeed deserves great credit for bringing a dual championship to Toronto, and has proven himself both a great ball player and manager as well. But when you search among modern baseball managers and players for a man of the type of Anson, Comiskey and Hangon, you will find that Hugh Jennings, manager of the champion Detroit team, is the one one most deserving of being enrolled in the baseball hall of fame, along with the other "old masters of the diamond." Much has been printed of late eulogizing Jennings for his great work in developing the Tigers into a winning organization, but to those unfamiliar with the situation as he found it when he went to Detroit it is hard to realize what he had to contend with. The writer is personally acquainted with several of the Detroit players and was well posted on baseball matters in Detroit before Jennings's advent there. 'Tis true the material was there already, as was evidenced in the last Detroit vs. New York series 1906, but is there another man in the country who could have made these men forget their differences and unite them with this motto for their slogan, "One for all and all for one." A short story told me some fifteen years ago, by an old teacher of mine who came from Jenning's home town, will give you an idea of what this man is made of. Avoca, Pa., his home town, was playing a rival town for the local baseball championship. The rivalry between these two towns was much the same as now exists between Peterborough and Fort Hope. During the game the Avoca catcher was injured. It was supposed that this accident would cost Avoca the game as their pitcher's delivery was very speedy and hard to handle. Jennings was the volunteer who saved the day, going in and catching the remainder of the game with bare hands, the latter looking like a couple of raw steaks at the finish of the game. In closing I would like to go on record with a prediction that Jennings and his Detroit Tigers will also win the world's championship when they meet the champion Cubs of the National League.

Yours very truly,

R. E. DOLAN.

United States Will Check the Steady Flow of Asiatics

Will Have Patrols on the Canadian Border

Immigration of Japs Into America is Increasing

Washington, October 9.—The immigration of Japanese into America is increasing at so alarming a rate that it has been determined by the United States Government to adopt extraordinary measures to prevent the introduction into the United States, not only of Japanese, but of other Asiatic coolie laborers.

One result of the trip of Secretary Straus, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, along the Canadian border and the Pacific coast has been an order increasing the force of immigration inspectors along the Canadian border, with a view to controlling if possible the flood of Asiatic immigration into America.

Official figures of the immigration of Japanese into America are not available because Secretary Straus does not care to make them public, but it is known that more than double the number of Japanese have come into the United States thus far in the year 1907 than came in here during the same period last year. Naturally the figures of the Government do not include the hundreds of Japanese who have come into the country surreptitiously. They have come across the Canadian and Mexican borders practically without hindrance, despite the regulations adopted by the Government to prevent the introduction of Japanese laborers.

The Government of Japan does not issue passports for laborers for America. It does, however, issue passports to them for the Hawaiian Islands, and Canada. Once in the Hawaiian Islands they take passage either to Mexico or to Canada, and their way across the border line into the United States from either Mexico or the Dominion is easy. They take train for instance, from Mexico to Canada, through the United States. The railroads are not bonded, as they are in the case of Chinese passengers, to deliver them at specified destinations. The result is that the Japanese leave the train at any point they may choose. They disappear and it is practically impossible to find them.

For many months the Government has had immigration inspectors in Mexico and Canada making investigations respecting the coming to America of Asiatic laborers, especially Japanese. In practically every instance, the inspectors have reported that the Japanese who reach Canada or Mexico are bound for the United States. Countries in the Hawaiian islands have created organizations whose business it is to procure Japanese laborers for work in the United States. They not only provide the means but prepare the way so that the Japanese may get through Canada or Mexico. This sort of opposition the government proposes to combat. By the appointment of what practically constitutes a patrol guard of the northern and southern borders of the country, Secretary Straus hopes to reduce the number of Asiatics, Japanese, Chinese and Hindus who are daily coming across the borders in great and increasing numbers.

Returns from the Canadian immigration office show that 3,256 Asiatics were landed at the British Columbian ports of Victoria and Vancouver between January 1st and September 1st, 1907. Of this number 26 were Hindus and 1,611 were Japanese.

Mr. Gerald Hall Heard From

Some young friends of Mr. Gerald Hall, lately of this city, yesterday received some colored photographs showing views of San Juan, Porto Rico, W.E.I. It will be remembered that Mr. Hall recently accepted a prominent position under government of the island as civil engineer. The pictures includ a view of La Marina from the harbor of San Juan, and a native hut. Mr. Hall noted that he arrived safely and enjoys his new tropical surroundings.

SIR WILLIAM VAN HORNE, PRESIDENT CUBA RAILROAD

Sir William's Railroad Has Big Increase

Montreal, Oct. 10.—The railroad in Cuba of which Sir William Van Horne is President, and upon which he has devoted much time and energy, has just concluded a satisfactory year.

Three years ago the Cuba railroad Company wound up with a deficit of $42,077. This year it shows net earnings of $658,354.

Gross earnings were practically $2,000,000 an increase of nearly over 20 per cent compared with 1906.

In this year's report Sir William gives the shareholders a brief history of the road and of the conditions of Cuba at the close of the Spanish-American War. A rich country, he says, was unsettled and undeveloped because of lack of transportation facilities.

Sir William writes in part,

"The Cuba Company was organized in May, 1900, and immediately commenced the surveys of a railroad extending along the centre of the island from Santa Clara towards Santiago. Its next step was the purchase of the Sabanilla and Moroto railroad, an old road of about thirty miles, which afforded the only entrance to Santiago, through a narrow mountain pass. The work of construction of the main line of the railway from Santa Clara to it connection with this purchased line, 135 miles was commenced in November, 1900, and the rails were joined in November 1902.

"Meantime the road was sold by The Cuba Company to the Cuba Railroad Company, the line to be completed by the former company, and while the work of completion was going on up to the end of 1905 the road was operated by the Cuba Company for the account of the Cuba Railroad Company.

"A branch of 33 miles to Antilla, on Nipe Bay, a fine harbor on the north coast, was completed in 1906. Other short branches which are meantime under the report have been made, and we have now a total of 426 miles of completed railway."

News Briefs

Ottawa, Oct. 9.—One of the most peculiar cases which have ever been dealt with by the Hull Superior Court has about been disposed of by Judge Robidoux. Joseph Dubois of Aylmer, Que., was brought before the Court charged with the non-support of his wife.

In the evidence it was shown that Mrs. Dubois had refused to live with her husband or keep house for him unless he paid her two dollars a day for her services. He therefore refused and his wife left him.

The judge held that the wife's claims were absurd and dismissed the case.

Paris, Oct., 9.—The King of Portugal is well known as a delicate gourmet. He possesses an excellent appetite, but this gratification has its drawbacks. He has become extremely obese, but he does not follow the example of American financiers desirous of regulating their digestive functions by taking the cure in the Hot Springs resorts. Obeying the orders of his medical adviser, he takes his meals on a chair fitted with a weighing apparatus and as soon as the index marks a certain figure he quits the table. He hopes with this regime and much exercise, to reduce his weight to 250 pounds.

Two previous attempts were made by the department to lay down lobsters in where he has been studying the possibility of successfully transplanting lobsters from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick waters into the Pacific Ocean.

It is likely that a shipment of lobster eggs with some adult fish, will spring.

Most of the latter reached Canada from Hawaii. The remainder were Chinese, who paid an admission fee of $35 for the privilege of landing in Canada. The investigations of United States immigration inspectors have shown that most of the Japanese and Chinese expect to ultimately get into the United States.

Young Boy Confessed to Murder

Camden, N. J., October 10.—Jos. Wood, aged 15 years, who was arrested on suspicion following the murder of nine year old Ethel Silvens, whose body was found in a thicket not far from her home in East Camden on Saturday, made a confession, according to an official statement issued by Inspector Stuart, in which he admits having murdered the girl. The confession was wrung from Wood after an examination which lasted all the evening.

Ethel Nivins disappeared from her home last Thursday. Her mother was in the habit of leaving the child and a younger brother in charge of Wood, while he went on shopping tours. The girl was sent on an errand with her brother on Thursday afternoon and failed to return home. She was killed with a hatchet.

Breakfast Monotony

The same old chops, or bacon and eggs, and bread for breakfast—may be avoided. Try

Fruit (preferably cooked)
Four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with cream or milk.
Eggs, one or two poached or soft-boiled.
Cup of Postum Food Coffee with cream and sugar.
Toast, one or two slices nice and crisp.

This will give you an ideal combination of the three principal food elements—proteids, carbohydrates and fats—in the most easily digestible forms.

And it means a wide awake individual with energy and a clear head to make a stir in the world; it replaces that dull, sluggish feeling which so often follows the "old-time meat-and-biscuit breakfast."

The man who has work to do can't afford to be handicapped with the half effort that comes under the best of circumstances, but when the digestive organs fail to do their part in giving "gone feeling" use about the time of day when he needs his best mental and physical powers.

Grape-Nuts food affords real strength of mind and body with little effort (or waste force) in getting it converted in the system into energy and staying-power—the power to act and to endure.

THEY MIGHT HAVE FUSED

Harold Begbie, writing in the London Chronicle wonders if the people of Quebec might not have fused with the English, if they had not been permitted to retain their own language. This is a part of a long story. Under the wise administration of General Murray, who was the first Governor of Quebec, after the surrender of the country to England, excellent progress was being made in the amalgamation of the two races, but in view of the determination of Lord North to put pressure upon the American colonies, it was deemed advisable to keep Quebec satisfied with the new regime, by conceding to the Roman Catholic clergy everything that they desired in respect to laws, religion and language, of a great many people, and so often expressed in print, that the right of the people of Quebec to have the conditions now existing there preserved, is based upon a treaty with France, but this is an error. It arose from a statute which was of a piece of the blundering policy which cost England the Thirteen Colonies. It is too late now to change matters. A fusion of races may be brought about in time, but the signs of it are not very promising.

CHINA'S ADVANCE

It must be supposed that the Japanese are alone, among the great nationalities of the East in the advance towards making full use of the developments of the Western world. There has come an awakening to the world of the Orient. In India it is causing an awakening amongst all the various populations which make up the Empire. No wonder need be expressed if there is an effervescence and an overflowing of national zeal which kicks against the existing government just now. Matters will right themselves no doubt when the natives of India come to realize that they can find immense development, and room for satisfying national aspirations under responsible government by Anglo-Saxons. China is awakening also. She has heard the cry "respondete natalibus" and is rising to the level of her privileges in a dignified manner in Manchuria, and in her other provinces. The model upon which her progress is being formed is largely British, and numbers of English trained men have been employed in various advisory capacities. It is surprising to see the increase in true practical education which has occured within the past two years. Recently a Prominent merchant of Shanghai, by name Wu Ting Sang was speaking of this lately. He remarked:

"There is any number of colleges in Shanghai where English is taught, and this is also true of four universities in and around the same city. The people of my land, and more particularly the students, are anxious to learn the language, and are taking up the work all over the country. In addition to the colleges and universities, there are hundreds of missions where boys and girls are taught to talk as you do in this country. Even the coolies, the laboring men around the hotels and public stations who come in contact with the travelling tourists, have picked up parts of the language, and one would be surprised how well they can get along in Shanghai, although they may not be able to speak your tongue perfectly."

It has been the greatest surprise possible to the diplomatic world to see how perfectly China has re-established herself in the provinces Russia coveted and partly exploited, and how she has taken advantage of every trad outlet for her own people.

KEENE

The Fair held here last week was a decided success in every way. The exhibit of roots, although not up to the average of former years, was very good considering the backward weather of the present year. The live stock far surpassed that of former years. The gate receipts were $50 in advance of last year.

A side curtain of a buggy top and a pair of spectacles in a tin case, were found on the road between the station and Keene on the morning after the Fair. The owner or owners can have the same by calling at the Victoria House, Keene.

On Friday morning last as Thomas McFarlane was engaged in hauling a large load of old tins to the dumping grounds, he had the misfortune to fall off the road and severely injure himself. We are glad to learn that he is rapidly recovering from his injuries and is able to walk around again.

Several young men in this village took in the Millbrook Fair on Friday last. Of course they had companions with them.

The dramatic play entitled, "The Noble Outcast" was ably executed here by home talent. A full house and large proceeds was the result.

Every town and village as a rule is more or less molested with unreliable tale-bearers and our small village is no exception to the rule. It was reported here last week that one of our citizens was dead. On ascertaining that the report was not correct one of our wiseacres in order to gratify his unsociable disposition reported that he was drunk. Now, in justice to the injured person, we can, and do vouch that he was not drunk or in any way accountable for the accident which befell him. To this unreliable and contemptible wretch of humanity, we do hurl scorn and shame and advise him to devote more of his time to his own personal affairs and he will be more respected.

HE WANTED MORE.

One Million Not Enough For the Workman Seeking a Good Time.

A man of extreme wealth, tired of taking care of his money, went to a secluded spot on a river bridge and jumped off. He was not aware that life savers always frequent secluded spots and that the best place to commit suicide is on Broadway at noon. And, sure enough, a poor workman leaped in after him and pulled him out, cold and shivering.

As he stood there, dripping, it occurred to the wealthy man that what he had needed was not eternity, but just a cold bath. And he waxed grateful.

"I am rich beyond telling," he said "I will grant any wish. I will make real your wildest hopes."

The poor workman replied instantly "Then give me a million dollars."

"A million dollars!" sneered he whose life had been saved. "That is the easiest thing in the world. But stop a moment—consider. It was money that made me try to kill myself. You had better go slow."

"A million dollars," repeated the poor workman stolidly.

"Very well; you shall have it. But since you have saved my life I will make this further offer: If at the end of three years you are not satisfied with your bargain come to me and I will do whatever else you wish."

Three years passed, and the former poor workman came to his benefactor's door.

"Aha, I thought so!" exclaimed the man of great wealth. "I knew you would come back. You know now how little mere money means. Now, what can I do for you?"

"Alas, I have found how little happiness can be got with a million," was the sad reply.

"Ahn, I knew it!" exclaimed the man of extreme wealth. "And since you have found how little happiness can be got with a million, what will you have me do for you next?"

"Give me another million," replied the former poor workman.—Freeman Tilden in Judge.

How He Gets Relief.

The Rev. E. W. Webber, a Maine minister, who was located for awhile in a Georgia town as pastor of a Universalist church, occasionally relates this story:

He was talking with William Dodson, ex-president of the Georgia senate.

"I suppose you feel the heat greatly down here in the summer, don't you?" queried Mr. Webber of the southern man.

"Well, it does get pretty warm here sometimes," admitted Mr. Dodson, "but every time I feel too warm I think of the visit I once made to Boston, and it sends the cold shivers all over me."

HORSE BREEDING.

Districts Should Specialize in the Production of Horses.

In one district of Richland county we have counted as many as forty-one pure bred Percheron mares owned by members of a breeding association, while the same district owns many high class grade mares of the same blood. Soon such a district will become famous for its draft horse stock of this particular breed, and that is the sort of reputation needed by each breeding district in the state. So long as each district produces a heterogeneous collection of horses of all manner of blood combination no success will be attained in attracting buyers ready to pay good prices for the class of horses they wish to find in sufficient numbers. There is no outside demand for the mongrels and misfits.

Centers For Buyers.

Jefferson county has become famous for her dairy cows. Around Lake Mills one may find finely bred Holsteins in considerable numbers, and in the Athens district of Marathon county the late lamented Hon. Fred Riethrock made Guernsey cattle numerous and profitable among the settlers. To such centers go the buyers ready and willing to purchase at remunerative prices even more animals than are ready for their needs. We should have hundreds of such centers celebrated for their horses of some distinct and valuable type. We want centers of this sort in which the buyer can find numbers of a given kind of horse, centers where heavy draft horses of one or other of the well known breeds may be found uniform in type and excellence of development, and other centers where the buyer may find ready to his hand hundreds of high class carriage horses.

Shortsighted Policy.

But not every breed should be found striving one against the other in each district in the state. Such is too commonly the objectionable condition existing at the present time. There is nothing to be gained by such short sighted policy. "In unity there is strength." By uniting for the production of one standard, necessary profitable product in a given district, the breeders may confidently count upon success, and we sincerely trust that such a policy may soon direct the breeding operations of every horse producing district in Wisconsin.—Bulletin, Department of Agriculture, Wisconsin.

THE VETERINARY.

The occurrence in Virginia of sore mouth of cattle, an inflammation of the mucous membranes, has led Veterinarian Spencer of the state experiment station to outline in Southern Planter a course of treatment, as follows: Remove affected animals from such pastures as have produced it. Provide nutritive food, which must be sloppy or soft boiled roots, bran and ground oats and corn made into mashes. Pure water in abundance is very important. Among medicinal agents there is a large group which give favorable results. Probably none can be selected which can modify the condition more than freely washing out the mouth two or three times daily with a warm 1 per cent solution of creoline, to be followed after each washing by the following mixture applied to the denuded surfaces with a swab of cotton tied on a small stick: Chlorate of potash, four ounces; tincture of iron, four ounces; glycerin, six ounces; water, one gallon. Fodder containing fungus is thought to be a fruitful cause of the disease.

Poor Digestion in the Horse.

A horse constantly loses flesh, is hungry all the time, teeth appear all right and no signs of worms are noticed. A veterinary surgeon who has seen many such cases, generally with either bad teeth or worms, advises as follows in Rural New Yorker:

First have mouth examined by a competent veterinarian. Employ a man whom you know is up to date to fix her mouth and then have a druggist put up the following: Iron sulphate, four ounces; powdered gentian, six ounces; nux vomica, two ounces; powdered wormseed, four ounces; powdered ginger, two ounces; bloodroot, four ounces. Have this all thoroughly mixed together and give the animal a heaping teaspoonful morning and night with her oats and bran, and at the end of two weeks give her one-half pint of raw linseed oil with one-half ounce of turpentine mixed in thoroughly with the oil.

Worms in Sheep.

The Louisiana experiment station has been treating stomach and tape worms in sheep and lambs with the following vermifuge: Tobacco, powder, one part; sulphured sulphur, two parts; air slaked lime, four parts; common salt, sixteen parts. These materials were thoroughly mixed and placed in a small wooden box protected from the weather, and to which both ewes and lambs could have access at all times." As the sheep did not eat it well salt put in the feed was substituted. The salt did not prevent the worms from gathering in the stomach, but it seemed to promote a better gain.

Warts on Cow's Teats.

Remedies for warts on a cow's teats are various. Professor Donald McIntosh's idea, as given in American Agriculturist, is: Tie a strong thread tightly around the base of each wart and when it sloughs off apply a little terchloride of antimony to the parts once to destroy the roots of the wart. Then mix twenty grains tannic acid with one ounce each of glycerin and water; apply a little after each milking until the parts are healed. Use a milk tube to draw off the milk until cured.

Exhausting the Supply.

"She does seem to know everybody else's business."

"Yes, she never leaves anything for another single soul to tell."—Baltimore American.

CLEVER BALANCING.

How an Apparently Impossible Feat May Be Performed.

If you were told that you can balance a cup one-quarter full of coffee on the point of a knife, you would hardly believe it. Provided you are not particularly nervous, however, you should not find it such a difficult feat. You might try it—that is, if your mother doesn't object on the ground that you are likely to break half a dozen cups in practice.

Insert a cork in the handle of a cup tightly. Stick two of the prongs of a four pronged fork into the cork in the position shown in the picture.

This arrangement lowers the center of gravity of the whole, and if you have a steady hand you may now place the cup on the point of the knife. —Philadelphia North American.

A Trusting Monkey.

Poor little monkeys! They get hungry and tired and sleepy just like children. Here is a story of one that lives in Buffalo. He belonged to an organ grinder who stopped in front of a veranda where a kind hearted gentleman sat. When he came up and held out his little cup for a bit of money the gentleman, who is very fond of animals, gave him a red cheeked apple. The monkey jumped upon his lap and ate the apple, and between the bites he fixed his bright eyes on the face of his new friend. He must have made up his mind that he would trust him, for as he finished the apple he laid his head against the gentleman's arm and fell asleep. The kind friend of animals paid the organ grinder to play a long time, so that the tired little monkey could have his nap. When he awoke his master pulled the chain, and he followed the organ grinder, much brighter and happier for the kindness shown to him.

Pillow Climbing.

In the middle of the floor some distance apart place soft cushions, lamps, bric-a-brac, etc. From among the company choose a very smart young man who has never "learned" and ask him to walk over the course between these articles, so as to fix in his mind the situation and distances of the various things. He is then blindfolded and directed to thread his way among them so as not to touch one. Very gingerly he will take his steps and wind about over the floor, and when, triumphant over his success, the handkerchief is taken from his eyes he is greatly surprised to see that not an article remains on the floor. All were quickly and quietly removed while he was being blindfolded. It is great fun to see him moving cautiously and tacking here and there to avoid impediments that do not exist.

Origin of Sunday.

Sunday, as the word implies, is Sunday—the day of the sun. Men worshiped the sun for a long time before they began to worship God, and Sunday was the day on which the source of light and heat received their adoration. On this day Christ's resurrection is supposed to have taken place; hence the Sunday became the worship day of the Christians.

Riddles.

Why is a tallow chandler always miserable? Because all his works are wicked and always brought to light.

The river a man would name if he suddenly remembered he was in debt? Ohio.

On Friday Afternoon.

He failed in plain arithmetic;
In grammar, too, his head was thick;
Geography was quite a blank,
And low in spelling was his rank.

But well he learned a piece to say
At school on Friday—speaking day.
'Twas all about the pilgrim band
Who to America did land.

And this he still knows, you! For he
Has practiced evenings after tea,
And mother, father, Kate and Shag
Had heard it oft without mishap.

Yet, lo, when Friday afternoon,
In smiles' bloom and pinafore shown,
He marched upon the platform here,
Though it was to turn one's hair!

The alphabet he could have said
Both ways and standing on his head!
By dot and dash had multiplied
And bounded Europe on every side

Described a verb and proper nouns
Had spoiled the other subjects round
But of that piece—ah, how shameful!
He did not know a single word!

Something New in Copper

PITTSBURG - IDAHO
Mining and Milling Company

The mine is located 58 miles above Lewiston, Idaho, on the Clearwater river, and consists of 19 full claims, or 380 acres. It is developed by tunnels, shafts and open cuts for more than 2100 feet, disclosing thousands of tons of copper, gold and silver ores of both high grade and low grade. There are between 1000 and 2000 tons of ore ready for shipment. The entrance to the working tunnel is only 2000 feet from the track of the Northern Pacific railroad, to be reached by gravity trainway. There are seven parallel veins running lengthwise of the claims, one cropping out on the surface for 2400 feet and another for 3000 feet, while two veins cross these running into the mountain. These veins are from 30 to 200 feet wide. One ore chute has been crosscut 80 feet and is solid ore from wall to wall.

We are not asking you to buy in a prospect. That risk was taken by the promoters. We are asking you to buy in a developed, proven mine. Seven years of continuous work and the expenditure of thousands of dollars has proven up one of the greatest mines in Idaho. That mine is now ready to pour out its red and yellow wealth to the world with the installing of an up to date production plant. It is for that purpose that a block of its treasury stock, full paid and non-assessable, is offered for sale. We believe that within six months from the completion of a 100 ton plant the mine can be put on a dividend paying basis, and that those dividends will be substantial and permanent. Thee is no better investment proposition before the people at this time.

CAPITALIZATION $1,000,000. - PAR VALUE $1.

On to Willow Creek!

Recent discoveries at Willow Creek, in the Greenwater Copper region, have caused a rush of excited miners. The Baltic strike and other explorations of neighboring ground are unquestionably authentic. We have identically the same indications on our Providence group, located near the mouth of Willow Creek. Water is plentiful but transportation hitherto has been difficult. Now the Tonopah & Tidewater Railroad has extended into Death Valley, and Willow Creek is attracting capital, and the town of that name contains a thousand souls.

AIKENSIDE

BY MARY J. HOLMES

Author of "Dora Deane," "The English Orphans," "Lena Rivers," "The Rector of St. Mark's," "Tempest and Sunshine," Etc.

"Doc," he said, when his survey was completed "how old are you—twenty-five or twenty-six?"

"Twenty-five—just your age—why?" and the doctor looked with an expression so wholly innocent of Guy's real meaning that the latter, instead of telling why, replied:

"Oh! nothing; only I was wondering if you would do to be my father. Agnes, I verily believe, is more than half in love with you; but, on the whole, I would not like to be your son; so I guess you'd better take someone younger—say Jessie. You are only eighteen years her senior."

The doctor stared at him amazed, and when he had finished said with the utmost candor: "What has that to do with Madeline? I thought we were talking of her."

"Innocent as the newly-born babe," was Guy's mental comment, as he congratulated himself on his larger and more varied experience.

And truly Dr. Holbrook was as simple-hearted as a child, never dreaming of Guy's meaning, or that any emotion save a perfectly proper one had a lodgment in his breast, as he drove down to Honedale, guarding carefully Guy's bouquet, and wishing he knew just what he ought to say when he presented it.

Maddy had gained rapidly the last three days. Good nursing and the doctor's medicines were working miracles, and on the morning when the doctor, with Guy's bouquet, was riding rapidly toward Honedale, she was feeling so much better that in view of his coming she asked if she could not be permitted to receive him sitting in the rocking-chair, instead of lying there in bed, and when this plan was vetoed as utterly impossible, she asked anxiously:

"And must I see him in this night-gown Can't I have on my pink gingham wrapper?"

Hitherto Maddy had been too sick to care at all about her personal appearance, but it was different now. She did care, and thoughts of meeting again the handsome, stylish-looking man who had asked her to conjugate amo, and whom she fully believed to be Dr. Holbrook, made her rather nervous. Dim remembrances she had of someone gliding in and out, and when the pain and noise in her head was at its highest, a hand, large, and, oh! so cool, had been laid upon her temples, quieting their throbbings, and making the blood course less madly through the swollen veins. They had told her how kind, how attentive he had been, and to herself she had said: "He's sorry about that certificate. He wishes to show me that he did not mean to be unkind. Yes; I forgive him; for I really was very stupid that afternoon."

And so, in a most forgiving frame of mind, Maddy submitted to the snowy robe which grandma brought in place of the coveted gingham wrapper, and which became her well, with its daintily crimped ruffles about the neck and wrists. Those wrists and hands! How white and small they had grown! and Maddy sighed, as her grandmother buttoned together the wristbands, to see how loose the wrapper was.

"I have been very sick," she said. "Are my cheeks as thin as my arms?"

They were not, though they had lost some of their symmetrical roundness. Still there was much of childish beauty in the young, eager face, and the hair had lost comparatively none of its glossy brightness.

"That's him," grandma said, as the sound of a horse's gallop was heard, and in a moment the doctor reined up before the gate.

From Mrs. Markham, who met him in the door, he learned how much better she was; also how "she has been reckoning on this visit, making herself all a-sweat about it."

Suddenly the doctor felt returning all his old dread of Maddy Clyde. Why should she worry herself into a sweat? What was there in that visit different from any other? Nothing, he said to himself, nothing; and yet he, too, had been more anxious about it than any he had ever paid. Depositing his hat and gloves upon the table, he followed Mrs. Markham up the stairs, vaguely conscious of wishing she would stay down, and very conscious of feeling glad; when just at Maddy's door and opposite a little window, she espied the bees busily engaged in devouring the yeast cakes with which she had taken so much pains, and which she had placed in the hot sun to dry. Finding that they paid no heed to her loud "Shoo, shoo," she started herself to drive them away, telling the doctor to go right on and to help himself.

The perspiration was standing under Maddy's hair by this time, and when the doctor stepped across the threshold, and she knew he really was coming near her, it oozed out upon her forehead in big, round drops, while her cheeks glowed with a feverish heat. Thinking he should get along with it better if he treated her just as he would Jessie, the doctor confronted her at once, and asked:

"How is my little patient to-day?"

A faint scream broke from Maddy's lips, and she involuntarily raised her hands to thrust the stranger away. This black-eyed, black-haired, thick-set man was not Dr. Holbrook, for he was taller and more slight, while she had not been deceived in the dark brown eyes which, even while they seemed to be mocking her, had worn a strange fascination for the maiden of fourteen and a half. The doctor fancied her delirious again, and this reassured him at once. Dropping the bouquet upon the bed, he clasped one of her hands in his, and without the slightest idea that she comprehended him, said, soothingly:

"Poor child, are you afraid of me—the doctor, Dr. Holbrook?"

Maddy did not try to withdraw her hand, but raising her eyes, swimming in tears, to his face, she stammered out:

"What does it mean, and where is he—the one who—asked me—those dreadful questions? I thought that was Dr. Holbrook."

Here was a dilemma—something for which the doctor was not prepared and with a feeling that he would not betray Guy, he said:

"No; that was someone else — a friend of mine—but I was there in the back office. Don't you remember me? Please don't grow excited. Compose yourself, and I will explain all by and by. This is wrong. 'Twill never do," and talking thus rapidly he wiped away the sweat, about which grandma had told him.

Maddy was disappointed, and it took her some time to rally sufficiently to convince the doctor that she was not flighty, as he termed it; but composing herself at last, she answered all his questions, and then, as he saw her eyes wandering toward the bouquet, he suddenly remembered that it was not yet presented, and placing it in her hands, he said:

"You like flowers, I know, and these are for you. I——"

"Oh! thank you, thank you, doctor; I am so glad. I love them so much, and you are so kind. What made you think to bring them? I wanted flowers so badly; but I could not have them, because I was sick and did not work in the garden. It was so good in you," and in her delight Maddy's tears dropped upon the fair blossoms.

For a moment the doctor was sorely tempted to keep the credit thus enthusiastically given; but he was too truthful for that, and so watching her as her eyes glistened with pleasure, he said;

"I am glad you like them, Miss Clyde, and so will Mr. Remington be. He sent them to you from his conservatory."

"Not Mr. Remington from Aikenside—not Jessie's brother?" and Maddy's eyes now fairly danced as they sought the doctor's face.

"Yes, Jessie's brother. He came here with her. He is interested in you, and brought these down this morning."

A MYSTERIOUS CALL.

Three Dots, Three Points of Light and a Mars Possibility.

Strange things are happening. For some time past toward midnight the receivers of the wireless telegraph stations have registered, and for a long period at a time, the signal three dots, which is persistently repeated. It has been proved, after investigation, that from no earthly station has such a message been sent at such a time. What, then, is this mysterious call? These three dots singularly recall three points of light which were observed on the planet Mars in 1901.

Midnight. Tap, tap, tap! Tap, tap, tap! Tap, tap, tap! Three sharp little knocks, short and hurried, sound insistently in the vast silence of the Marconi station. The sleeping employees are awakened with a start, and, frightened and vaguely anxious, they look at each other.

"Did you hear it? It is beginning again. What is it, and who on earth can be sending it?"

"Don't you know your Morse alphabet? Three short dashes mean S. Will that receiver never stop sounding S, S, S when no one knows why it is repeating it? It gets on one's nerves—listen!"

Tap, tap, tap! Tap, tap, tap! "Yes, it is true, but what can we do? Every night this happens at midnight. As long as S is being telegraphed, the receiver will register it. When they have had enough of it they will stop."

But in the loneliness of their stations, so lost and solitary at the end of the promontory, the employees at the wireless telegraph station feel, in the oppressive silence of the deserted night, those painful shivers which the black wing of mystery sends creeping up the back as it flies near. For several days past these three taps have been obstinately repeated. Inquiries have been made at all the stations in the whole world. No one has sent forth such a message. Some one is telegraphing, but not from this world. It must be, then, that the message comes from somewhere beyond. What is this obstinate little voice that calls to us in the darkness across the cold immensity of sidereal space?

Three dots? Wait a moment—why, in 1892 and again in 1901 the observers of the heavens were talking about three dots. During those two years, through the most powerful telescopes, a triangle made of three luminous dots was distinguishable on the planet Mars, small to our sight, but in reality immense, a triangle whose sides measured several hundred kilometers in length. These luminous spots stood out in dazzling whiteness against the blood red background of Mars.—Charles Torquet in Metropolitan Magazine.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism. Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable, prescription. With that last ingredient, I successfully treated many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, I unfailingly cure all curable cases of this terrible, much dreaded disease. Those amid-like germ wastes found in Rheumatic Blood are destroyed and pass away under the action of this remedy freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is not a real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend Deprived of His Flogging.

The lord mayor's barge is being broken up for firewood at Deptford. The first lord mayor to deviate from the customary procession by water from Westminster hall was Alderman Wood in 1810, and superstitious people thought this wicked innovation was the cause of a curious disaster that befell him. During his term of office Wood committed a journeyman sugar baker to jail for leaving his employment in a dispute about wages. But he forgot to specify that the prisoner should be also flogged, as the statute provided. On his release the sugar baker, with grim humor, brought an action against the lord mayor and recovered "moral and intellectual damages" for being deprived of his flogging! This episode illustrates the genial relations between capital and labor in the brave days of old.—Westminster Gazette.

Subway Exits.

A number of fire exits opening into the ventilating shafts have recently been built in the New York subway for the use of passengers as a means of escape in case of a fire or blockade without the necessity of groping their way to stations. Signs marking the points by which escape may be made are five feet long and one foot high and bear the word "Exit" in white on a ground of blue enamel. Shaded electric lights are placed over them. Near the illuminated sign is a door which opens into the air chambers at the side of the tracks. An iron ladder with a rail leads to the top of the pit.—Exchange.

The Yellow Tens.

"Look sharp at the next yellow back twenty dollar bill you get and make sure that it isn't a ten," said the bank cashier. "The ten dollar bills of the 1907 series, of which few are in circulation as yet, have yellow backs of the same tint as the twenties, and the design is not distinctively different. I'll be surprised if there isn't more than one kick from careless persons who in their haste take some of the new tens by mistake. They wouldn't do it, though, if they did as we men in the banks do, always turn the bills face up before counting them."—New York Sun.

Officers and Directors

President ..... EDWARD T. PATRICK,
Mine Owner and President of the Goldfield Stock and Exchange Board.

Vice-President ..... JUDGE CHAS. L. HAYES,
Mine Owner and Leading Attorney of Goldfield, Nevada

Secretary and Treasurer ..... ADAMS F. BROWN,

Depository ..... JOHN S. COOK & CO.,
Bank of Goldfield, Nevada.

This company owns a claim (20 acres) of some of the best proven mines land in the Goldfield district, consisting of the Accidental and Accidental No. 2 lode claims, situated two and one-half miles south of the great Goldfield Consolidated Mines (comprising the Mohawk, Goldfield, Combination, Red Top, Jumbo and Laguna) the richest in the world, and the Broadway and Beauty lode claims situated three and one-half miles south of the Consolidated and about one and one-half miles northwest of the Great Bond and Daisy Mines near the Zion group in the Diamondfield section second only in richness to the great Mohawk portion of the camp. Phenomenally rich strikes have recently been made out in the Consolidated, the Great Bend and the Daisy Mines.

The company has also succeeded in securing the Sure Thing lode claim (20 acres) in the Cuprite district, which has an immense gold bearing ledge, running the entire length of the claim 1,500 feet, outcropping in places over 50 feet wide, and met by several cross dykes all carrying fine values in gold, and is without doubt rightly named "Sure Thing."

All of these claims are located in the same mineral belt as the other noted mines of Goldfield that have astonished the world by their production of millions in high grade ore, and will with the same development give equally profitable returns.

The money derived from the sale of this stock will be used at once for the active development of the property and the fact that all the directors are residents of Goldfield with years of successful mining experience who will give their personal attention at all times to the progress of the work goes to show that the first issue of 100,000 shares will meet with a quick and ready sale at the initial price of 10 cents per share.

We advise immediate action if you wish to participate in the vast profits of this treasury block.

Stock will be listed as soon as possible on the Goldfield and San Francisco Stock and Exchange Boards. Would therefore advise purchasers to buy in board lots of 1,000 shares when convenient to do so.

Wives and Mothers Suffer with Backache

Unfortunately They Fail to Recognize the Dangerous Cause of the Trouble.

Constantly on their feet, attending to the wants of a large and exacting family, women often break down with nervous exhaustion.

In the stores, factories, and on a farm are weak ailing women, dragged down with torturing backache and bearing down pains.

Such suffering isn't natural but it's dangerous, because due to diseased kidneys.

The dizziness, insomnia, deranged menses and other symptoms of kidney complaint can't cure themselves, they require the assistance of Dr. Hamilton's Pills which go direct to the seat of the trouble.

To give vitality and power to the kidneys, to lend aid to the bladder and liver, to free the blood of poisons, probably there is no remedy so successful as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. For all womanly irregularities their merit is well known.

Because of their mild, soothing and healing effect, Dr. Hamilton's Pills are safe, and are recommended for girls and women of all ages. 25 cents per box at all dealers. Refuse any substitute for Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut.

The Dairyman

Dairy farming is increasing in almost every section of the country, largely because it is recognized as one of the most economical forms of agriculture where preservation of soil fertility is considered. Opportunities for dairying are found everywhere in the United States. The different sections of the country have characteristic peculiarities, but all need milk and its products. Success awaits the dairyman who fits his work to the conditions of the place in which he lives. He should know the value of a good dairy cow and how to treat her. He should recognize the necessity of cleanliness from the time the milk leaves the udder until the finished product is in the hands of the consumer. He should know and meet the needs of his market.

Horses on the Dairy Farm.

On every dairy farm there are several horses kept to do the necessary farm work and hauling stuff to and from the city. During most of the year work is rather light on a dairy farm as compared with other kinds of work that the hoofs is called upon to do. There is some work to be done each day of the year, and this provides some exercise for the horse, which keeps him in good physical condition.

THERE WILL NEED DRAFT HORSES.
[Property of Wisconsin experiment station.]

There is an unlimited market for high class draft horses, just the kind that a dairy farmer could raise if he would breed the right kind of animals. The people who use draft horses in the city are willing to pay long prices for them if they can only get the kind they want. The horse weighing 1,000 pounds, out of ordinary stock, sells at a comparatively low price, but a team well matched, sound and with good action and weighing from 3,200 to 4,000 pounds sells quickly and at an exceptionally high price.

It seems to us that most dairymen are so situated that they could raise at least one good team of drafters each year and would scarcely feel the time and money spent in producing them, says Hoard's Dairyman.

What is needed is a team or two of well bred mares, not necessarily pure bred, but animals of good size, strong bones and well matched. If they be grade Percherons, breed them to the best Percheron stallion within reach; if they are Clydes, use a Clyde sire. Do not crossbreed, for it is just as ruinous a practice in the breeding of good horses as it is in the breeding of good cows. Aim to get well matched teams, strong bones, sound and with good action, and a ready market will always be found at good prices for such kind of horses.

The Man Behind the Cow.

Not long since an unwilling farmer said to me, "I like politics, but confound the cows." His cows and his farm showed that. He was a poor dairy farmer, and as a consequence a flimsy, slack twisted politician. Another sold his farm and moved into town, going into the grocery business. It took him two years to strike bankruptcy with marked success. Had he been a thorough, systematic farmer it would have given him the mental training concerning business which he lacked. There is no better school on earth than the dairy farm, with all its vegetable, animal, mechanical and commercial problems, to fit a man for safe comprehension in other affairs if he would but know it. How many farmers do you know who look on farming in that light? It is a light that will illumine the entire problem if farmers will only let it shine into their minds and hearts.—Ex-Governor W. D. Hoard, Jefferson County, Wis.

Refrigerator Boxes For Butter.

In the summer months it is a hard matter to transport butter from the dairy to the market and keep the prints in shape unless the dairyman has ice for this purpose. Light refrigerator boxes are manufactured which can be used to great advantage, as their use will keep the butter hard and firm and enable the maker to deliver it in that condition to his customers in the hottest weather. No one likes to buy a parcel of butter that is so soft that it can hardly be handled, and the good dairyman will not attempt to place butter on the market in that condition.—E. H. Webster.

A Japanese View.

Sen Utsunomiya, a graduate of the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin, who owns a dairy farm in Japan and has recently returned to America to buy a carload of pure bred dairy cattle, is credited with the opinion that American dairies need more sunshine in stables, more care regarding cleanliness in milking, more attention to stamping out tuberculosis and a larger number of pure bred sires in the herds.

Red and Gun Hunting Number

Hunting preparations are in full swing in October and every hunter will have his feelings stirred and his anticipations increased by a perusal of the fine hunting stories appearing in the pages of the October number of "Rod and Gun and Motor Sports in Canada," the fine Canadian sportsman's magazine, published by W. J. Taylor, at Woodstock, Ont. The number opens with a beautifully illustrated and descriptive word picture, "The Lord of the Silent Lakes"—the grand Canadian moose, and from this story to the end, hunting occupies the pride of place.

Hints after deer, goats, caribou, wolves, bears, and ducks are given in actual experiences and added to the interest each story arouses is the knowledge that similar occurrences may befall those who will shortly invade the peaceful solitudes of the backwoods. To every hunter these experiences must appeal with irristable force and many will find this Hunting Number the best companion they can take with them on their expeditions. Let their hunting be where it may be in Canada, and the game hunted what the hunters will, there is something to learn on the subject from the pages of the current issue of this magazine. Particularly timely is the article on the High Power Rifle and Fatalities in the Woods, by Mr. John Arthur Hope, while that on "How I Have Made a Success of Deer Hunting," by Jack Miner, should be read by every deer hunter.

Is Ten Thousand Dollars Enough?

Have you considered the earning power of money? Have you thought of the amount of Principal it requires to produce a given income? Invest $10,000 safely and what income would your widow get? Perhaps $500 per annum. Is that sufficient? Are you insured for even $10,000?

Think seriously of this. A man should have enough insurance to guarantee the comfort of those depending on him. Write to us asking for particulars respecting our special plans of insurance.

MASTS WENT BY BOARD BUT CREW CLUNG TO LIFE LINE

For Over Three Hours Wrecked Mariners Held Out on Breakwater, and Then Launched a Boat--One Woman Aboard

Southampton, Oct. 9.—The schooner Erie Stewart of Port Dover, owned by John Piggott and Sons, Chatham, which was wrecked here yesterday, was running from Chatham to Parry Sound, and when about ten miles above here, turned and made for Southampton harbor. The captain says the gas buoy light was out, and, owing to the rain and darkness, he could not see the black range light. The vessel struck the breakwater near the entrance to the harbor about 9.30 p.m., and her main mast and foremast went by the board. Three of the crew landed on the dock on the first bump, and the other four the second time she struck. They clung tenaciously to the life line till about one o'clock in the morning, when some of the wreckage cleared away, and they were able to get two boats out of the boat house at the end of the pier, and succeeded in making the lighthouse on Chantry Island. Shortly after they left, the foremast gave way, falling on the range light, which it was put out of business. Four feet of water was rolling over the pier.

The crew, which were so fortunate to escape with their lives, were.

Captain T. Depew, Standish, Mich.

John Glass, mate, Sarnie, son of Captain Glass of the Cavalier, which was wrecked here last fall.

John McDonald, Sarnia.

Wm. Jermyn, Chatham.

James Winn, Sarnie.

I. Fubeart and wife, Chatham, the latter being the cook.

Captain Depew has sailed on the Great Lakes for forty-three years. This was his first wreck, and he never lost a man. He told the owners a month ago that this was his last season. His wife has been with him every trip this season until this one, when she went to her home.

The boat was classed A. 2, and carried no insurance. The crew lost everything. The hull is now lying in twelve feet of water beside the pier. The crew are loud in praise of the kindness of the lightkeeper and his wife, Capt. and Mrs. Malcolm Melver.

NO WELCOME LIGHT.

The schooner Ontario from Chatham to Providence Bay, with baled hay, straw and oats, turned when at Duck Islands, and made for Southampton harbor. Owing to the gale she could not make Stokes Bay or Tobermoray. She got here between three and four a.m., but, owing to the light being gone, could not make the harbor of refuge, and tried to make the river harbor. She struck, and is now on the bottom about 25 yards from the shore, and 50 yards from the river mouth. The bow is in only two feet of water, and the bottom of the boat is crushed in, and filled with water, level with that outside. The crew stayed on her till day broke, when they made shore in the yawl boat.

Frank Granville, captain and owner, his two sons, and Geo. Hazzard, Frank Soppie, and another man formed the crew.

Captain Granville, was a Southamptonian who moved to Chatham last July. The vessel carried no insurance. The cargo may be saved, but it is doubtful if the boat will be, although the sea has calmed down.

BOAT STRUCK LIGHTHOUSE.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 9.—St. John yesterday experienced the heaviest storm in years. At one time the wind reached 64 miles an hour. The golden cross of St. Peter's church spire was bent out of position, but fortunately did not fall. Chimneys were broken, flues torn down, the telephone service was crippled, and long-distance lines were generally put out of business. A fearful storm raged in the Bay of Fundy, and in the harbor a great sea was kicked up. The American schooner John J. Ward drifted her anchor and struck the lighthouse, veering off and heading for the round reef. Two tugs, however, managed to save her, but not before both broke their hawsers.

Terrible Tragedies That Occurred Yesterday

Peterboro Boy Had His Head Taken Off

Hamilton, Oct. 11.—Frank O'Brien, a young fellow who came here from Peterborough recently, met a terrible fate at the Hamilton Steel and Iron plant, where he was employed early yesterday morning. He got tangled up in some machinery, and in full view of a score or more of horrified employes was completely beheaded. An inquest will be held.

Cut In Two by Car

Kingston, Oct. 10.—John McMurdock, aged 25 years, and married, was cut in two by a Kingston and Pembroke Railway train at Vernon this forenoon.

How he got under the wheels is not known. Deceased lived at Ompah, and was cook for a railway gang rebuilding the road.

John Rowan Killed

Brantford, Oct. 10.—John Rowan, a well-known married man, aged 40 years, residing in the city as a wheel tapper in the employ of the Grand Trunk, lost his life while at work in the local freight yards at three o'clock this morning. He was testing the wheels and connecting the air hose when a train was shunted suddenly while he was under the car. One leg was severed, the other broken and his back fractured. He died in the hospital half an hour later.

An inquest will be held.

Hamilton, Oct. 10.—Edward Marks who was crushed between two cars in the Grand Trunk Company's yards yesterday morning, died in the city hospital at an early hour this morning. Coroner Rennie opened an inquest, and it will be continued tomorrow night

Detroit Has Gone Baseball Crazy

Detroit, Oct. 10.—The hotels here are crowded to overflowing with baseball fans from the surrounding country to see the Detroit Tigers and the Chicago Cubs battle for the world's championship, but they were doomed to disappointment today. The National Commission, which controls the games, ruled that two complete games should be played on the grounds of each club before any change should be made. Tuesday's game in Chicago was a tie, therefore it will be played off in that city today. The teams will leave Chicago tonight for Detroit and will reach here early tomorrow morning.

ALL SEATS SOLD.

All seats for the games here have been sold, and thousands of people have been disappointed. The rankest mismanagement in the distribution of tickets for the games has raised a howl on the part of the faithful fans who find themselves out in the cold. Tickets have fallen into the hands of speculators, who make no bones in advertising that they will sell them for from $4 to $10 apiece.

"JENNINGS' CROAK."

This city is really baseball crazy. Everybody talks baseball, thinks baseball, sleeps baseball. They blow tin whistles and greet you with Manager Jennings' famous battle-cry "E-e-yap," that never made much of a hit last year in the Eastern League when Hughie managed the Baltimore team. Detroit fans have coined a new throat disease known in honor of the Tigers' peerless leader as the "Jennings' Croak." Sufferers from this malady, when attempting verbal expression, made a sound somewhat resembling that given out by steam radiators at 5 a.m.— with apologies to the janitors union. When complicated with the nervous affection known as "score boarditis" the ailment is even more serious. The unfortunate fan then makes a noise like a man choking to death, ties his face in a hard knot, and finally writes what he has to say on paper.

Chicago Captures Another

Chicago, Oct. 10.—As on the two previous days, the throngs of would-be spectators began early to move towards the field of battle. The atmosphere, which was quite cold early in the day, gradually became more like the baseball variety under the warm rays of the sun, but a strong west wind made light overcoats acceptable.

Today's line-up follows:

Detroit.	Chicago.
Jones, lf.	Slagle, cf.
Schaefer, 2b	Shekard, lf.
Crawford, cf.	Chance, 1b.
Cobb, rf.	Steinfeldt, 3b.
Rossman, 1b.	Kling, c.
Coughlin, 3b.	Evers, 2b.
Schmidt, c.	Schulte, rf.
Obery, ss.	Tinker, ss.
Siever, p.	Ruhbach, p.

Umpires—O'Day and Sheridan.

Detroit was defeated for the second time in the series by a score of 5 to 1.

Yesterday's defeat at Chicago is considered a mere trifle by the fans here who have absolute confidence in the ability of Jennings and his Tigers to win the series.

"Wait till Cobb gets hitting," they say. "Then we'll lose the Cubs."

Cobb made his first hit of the series yesterday, but the fans here expect him to make three or four every game.

Mayor Thomason of Detroit has forsaken civic duties and is at present in Chicago as leader of the Tigers' Rooters' Club, where he makes the cheering and the whistling and the yelling.

THOUSANDS WORE HANDKERCHIEFS.

Reports from Chicago say that not less than 10,000 people at the game yesterday were wearing handkerchiefs on their heads. The grand stands at the park are so low in the front that the hats of those sitting in the circus seats section obscured the view, those behind constantly yell at the thousands in front to take off their hats

Sad Death of a Former Local Citizen

Frank O'Brien Crushed Under the Wheels of a Freight Train

It was a common source of both talk and regret yesterday throughout the city when a telegram arrived intelligence that Frank O'Brien of Peterborough, was instantly killed about 12.30 yesterday morning at the east end plant of the Hamilton Steel and Iron Co., by being run over by a heavily ladened freight car.

Yesterday morning as O'Brien was riding on the side of a car laden with ingots, when he was jolted off. The car passed over him, fracturing his skull, breaking ten ribs and severing his spine. Death was instantaneous.

Coroner Rennie held an inquest. O'Brien was 18 years of age, his mother, brother and sisters reside in Peterborough. The body will be sent here for burial.

Mr. John Rogers Has Passed Away

After ailing from nervous diseases for years, Mr. John Rogers passed away yesterday morning in St. Joseph's Hospital. The deceased was a son of the late James Rogers, and resided with his mother at 262 Murray street. He was born in Peterborough. Besides his mother, he leaves one brother, Ed. of Rochester, and three sisters, Mrs. Thomas Kennedy, of Ashland, Wis., Sister St. Agnes of the Convent Notre Dame, Montreal, and Mrs. Isidore Derocher of Peterborough.

CANADA MUST MAKE CHOICE NOW SAYS RUDYARD KIPLING

Tells British Columbia It Is a Case Whether we Want People of Our Own Stock or Asiatics --Kipling Given an Ovation

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 11.—Mr. Rudyard Kipling had an ovation at the luncheon of the Canadian Club yesterday. So insistent was the demand for admission that a large hall had to be secured, and to the public galleries of this the lady guests of the club were admitted. Before Mr. Kipling had completed his first sentence the audience sprang to its feet and sang "He's a jolly good fellow."

After a charmingly-worded reference to the work of the men who had managed to "make of Victoria a magnificent city and at the same time to keep intact the magnificent treasure-house of its natural beauty," Mr. Kipling dwelt on immigration, and promised that on his return he would embody his views on Canada in some form. He contrasted the happy condition of the Canadian people with those of India. He then went on to point out the difference between Oriental and continental European immigration and settlers of British origin.

In the one case the immigrants regarded law as a monster. They were born in fear and reared in the panic necessary to the race. It is not necessary; continued Mr. Kipling, to evolve an elaborate scheme of education to instruct the immigrant from Great Britain how to talk the English language or to teach his children the rudiments of citizenship. He knows that he may have to learn much and to unlearn much, but at last he will have the same powers [illegible] as yours selves and follow the same ideas even as your fathers did along lines that you know well. He is like only room to develop his powers and his capabilities, and this room, I conceive, is offered in your vast Dominion.

"It is possible that in your strength you may think that this is not an urgent question, but the time is coming when you will have to choose between the desired reinforcements of your own stock and blood and the undesired of races to whom you are strangers, whose speech you do not understand, and from whose instincts and traditions you are separated by thousands of years—that is your choice. For, myself I think the time for making that choice is on you now." (Cheers.)

That Winnipeg Petition at Last Made Known to Public

Calgary, Oct. 11.—The Calgary Eye Opener created a sensation in the West by publishing on the day that Sir. R. L. Borden spoke in Calgary, a copy of a resolution, which, it was said, was drawn up by the Winnipeg Conservatives, to present to him demanding a convention. The Eye Opener claims it was to have been presented by Sanford Evans, who, however, at the last moment, got cold feet and disappeared. The petition, after a long preamble says:—

"Be it resolved, that we request Mr. Borden to call a Dominion convention of the Conservative party, at Winnipeg, in the month of January, or at some time suitable in the near future, with the object of deciding on convention and formulating the various planks of the Conservative party, setting forth their attitude on the great political issues of the day.

"And further be it resolved, that in case Mr. R. L. Borden refuses to call a Dominion convention in the interests of the party, the association and the other Conservative associations of this city withdraw their active influence at the coming bye-election for Mr. Borden in Manitoba, and that they communicate with the Conservative associations in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia requesting them to also withdraw their support."

The Eye Opener says that a member of the Manitoba Cabinet was behind the petition. Although the petition failed to reach Sir. Borden, and the question was not pushed, he was told so, it is claimed in pretty plain language, that he must call a convention.

It is possible that on his return to Winnipeg the question will again be taken up, as prominent young Conservatives feel very strongly on the subject.

Gordon Hunter is Found Guilty of Death of Edward Boylan

North Bay, Oct. 9.—The grand jury found Gordon Hunter, of Haileybury guilty of manslaughter in the death of Ed. Boylan from injuries received while being ejected from the Vendome Hotel at Haileybury last June.

The defence sought to prove that Boylan was abusive and acted offensively in the hotel, that Hunter was carrying out his instructions in maintaining order, and that Boylan was injured by falling down the steps of the hotel, no undue violence being used in his ejection.

Judge Riddell's charge to the jury was unfavorable to the prisoner. Upon being asked if he had anything to say, he stated to the court that he considered the verdict most unfair.

Hunter, who is very popular in Haileybury and a quite well behaved young man feels his position keenly and the verdict was a great surprise and shock to him, as well as his mother, wife and little daughter, who were present at the trial.

Prominent Haileybury citizens who are attending the assizes were confident that Hunter would be acquitted and many bitter comments were heard in the hotel corridors as to the verdict.

Serious Condition of Dr. Potts

Toronto, Oct. 11.—"The patient is still in a state of coma. He is slowly sinking. It may be a matter of days, or it may be a matter of hours."

Such was the statement of Rev. Dr. Potts' condition given to the press last evening by Dr. W. A. Young, his physician.

This May Solve Jap Problem

Tokio, Oct. 10.—The Japanese government has placed heavy restriction on emigration companies.

The announcement has just been made of a vast colonization scheme which will open up a million acres of land in Korea to Japanese settlement, and officials avert that this will solve the question of emigration to the United States and Canada.

Ealch Overtaxed Citizen Must Act

Notwithstanding the recent meeting held in protest against the unjust assessment in the city whereby the Court of Revision should investigate and remedy matters, if valuations are excessive, this does not remove the necessity for every taxpayer, who feels that he is overassessed to enter an appeal with the city clerk This must be done by each individual ratepayer This point was made clear in the strong address delivered by Mr. F. D. Kerr at the Board of Trade meeting on Tuesday night The important thing for ratepayers to remember is again emphasized, viz, the necessity of making a personal appeal where it is felt that the valuation is excessive or unjust.

Certainly Worth Trying

There is so much Rheumatism here now that the following advice by an authority will be highly appreciated by those who suffer.

Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake these well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime; also drink plenty of good water.

It is claimed that there are few victims of this kind of trouble that this will fail to help, and many cases it has entirely cured in most cases a few days of cure is the result.

This simple recipe is said to strengthen and cleanse the inner tissues of the Kidneys so that they can filter and strain from the blood and system the poisons, acids and waste matter, which cause not only Rheumatism, but numerous other diseases. Every man or woman here who feels that their kidneys are not healthy and active, or who suffers from any urinary trouble whatever, should not hesitate to make this mixture, as it is certain to do good, and may save you from much misery and suffering after a while.

"BOO HOO" Shouts a Spanked Baby

A Doctor of Divinity, now Editor of a well-known religious paper, has written regarding the controversy between Collier's Weekly and the Religious Press of the Country and others, including ourselves. Also regarding suits for libel brought by Collier's against us for commenting upon its methods.

These are his sentiments with some very emphatic words left out.

"The religious Press owes you a debt of gratitude for your courage in showing up Collier's Weekly as the Yell-Oh Man." Would you care to use the inclosed article on the "Boo Hoo baby" as the "Yell-Oh Man's" successor?"

A contemporary remarks that Collier's has finally "run" against a solid hickory "Post" and has been damaged in its own estimation to the tune of $500,000.00.

Here is a publication which has, in utmost disregard of the facts, spread broad and damaging statements about the Religious Press and others and has suffered those false statements to go uncontradicted, until, not satisfied after finding the Religious Press too quiet, and peaceful, to resent the insults, it makes the mistake of wandering into a fresh field and butts its rattled head against this Post and all we did was laugh. Every Christian's smile as the Post suddenly turns and gives it back a dose of its own medicine.

It is a mistake to say all the World laughs. No cheery laugh comes from Collier's, but it cries and boo hoos like a spanked baby and wants Mamma to soothe its tender lacerated feelings.

"Thank heaven it has at last struck a man with 'back bone' enough to call a 'spade' a spade and who believes in telling the whole truth without fear or favor."

Perhaps Collier's with its utmost disregard for the facts may see no such letter exists. Nevertheless it is on file in our office and is only one of a mass of letters and other data, newspaper columnings, etc., denouncing the "yellow" methods of Collier's. This volume is so large that a man could not well go through it under half a day's steady work. The letters come from various parts of America.

Usually a private controversy is not fit reading for the public but this is a public controversy.

Collier's has been using the "yellow" methods to attract attention to itself, but jumping in the air, cracking heels together and yelling "look at me" wouldn't suffice, so it started out on a "Holier than Thou" attack on the religious Press and on medicines.

We leave it to the public now, as we did when we first resented Collier's attacks, to say whether, in a craving for succession and circulation, its attacks do not amount to a systematic campaign of vilification and billingsgate. We likewise leave to the public to say whether Collier's, by its own policy and methods, has not made itself more ridiculous than any comment or ours could make it.

Does Collier's expect to regain any self-inflicted loss of prestige by demonstrating, thru suits for damages, that it can be more artful in evading liability for libels than the dumb but resentful victims of its defamation, or does it hope, by starting a campaign of libel suits to silence the popular indignation reproach and resentment which it has aroused.

Collier's can not delay this public controversy by private law suits. It can no postpone the public judgment against it. That great jury, the Public will hardly blame us for not waiting until we get a petit jury in a court room, before denouncing the prodigal detractor of truthfulness founded and fostered either by individuals or by the public itself.

Here is a publication which has, in utmost disregard of the facts, spread broad and damaging statements about the Religious Press and others and has suffered those false statements to go uncontradicted, until, not satisfied after finding the Religious Press too quiet, and peaceful, to resent the insults, it makes the mistake of wandering into a fresh field and butts its rattled head against this Post and all we did was laugh. Starchy food is not digested in the upper stomach but passes on into the duodenum, or lower stomach and intestines, where, in a healthy individual, the transformation of the starch into sugar is completed and then the food absorbed by the blood.

But the powers of digestion are weakened, a part of the starchy food will lie in the warmth and moisture of the body and decay, generating gas and irritating the mucous surfaces under such conditions the entire lower part of the alimentary canal, including the colon and the appendix becomes involved. Disease sets up and at times takes the form known as appendicitis.

When the symptoms of the trouble make their appearance, would it not be good, practical, common sense, to discontinue the starchy food which is causing the trouble and take a food in which the starch has been transformed into a form of sugar in the process of manufacture?

This is obviously the same form of sugar found in the human body after starch has been perfectly digested.

Now human food is made up very largely of starch and is consumed by the body for energy and warmth. Naturally, therefore, Postum should be continued, if possible, and for the reasons given above it is made possible in the manufacture of Grape-Nuts.

In connection with this change of food in being relief from physical disturbances, we have suggested weaning out the necessity to get rid of the immediate cause of the disturbance.

Naturally, there are cases where the disease has lain dormant and the abuse continued too long, until almost only the knife will avail. But in a vast and established list among the best physicians who are acquainted with the doings above recited, that proper measures are far and away the best.

We are to be condemned for suggesting a way to prevent disease by following natural methods and for perfecting a food that contains no medicine and produces optimal effects but which has guided literally thousands on paths from sickness to health. We have learned during the years past upwards of 5000 letters from people who have been benefited or made entirely well by following our suggestions, and they are simple.

If coffee disagrees and causes any of the ailments common to coffee users quit it and take on Postum.

If white bread, potatoes, rice and other starch foods make trouble, quit and use Grape-Nuts food which is largely predigested and will digest, nourish and strengthen, when other forms of food do not. It is just plain old common sense.

"There's a Reason" for Postum and Grape-Nuts.

UNION LABEL

PETERBOROUGH, OCTOBER 11, 1907.

AS VANCOUVER SEES THE JAPANESE

The current Harper's Weekly publishes a remarkably interesting and authoritative account of the Japanese situation in Vancouver, written by the city editor of the Vancouver Daily Province, Mr. R. Brown. "White Canada," says Mr. Brown, "is now the city's slogan. A gay ribbon carrying these words flutters in everybody's buttonhole. The labor unions," he says, "have taken it up, and a month's notice has been given to every employer of Chinese and Japanese cooks and waiters in the city that all must be replaced by white labor, which will be furnished by the union. The civic authorities are indirectly supporting the labor people. Three days after the riot nearly a thousand Hindus arrived by the steamer Monteagle. The Mayor wired to Premier Sir Wilfrid Laurier pointedly asking that the government drill-hall be granted to house them at the government's expense, as Vancouver had no room for them. The Premier did not grant the request and the Hindus are now living in tents or the open air.

"The unsophisticated Hindu—dirty and gaunt and with a roll of pagan dry-goods wrapped around his head, but still a British subject—is regarded with complacency alongside the Japanese. Five thousand of the latter—insolent and aggressive—live and trade and prosper in Vancouver. They are in every business, from brokerage to pawnbroking and fishing and tailoring. Everywhere they compete in a finished style with every white man. A Chinaman's word in business is as good as the money in the national bank, but the Japanese is a slippery individual, who drives a hard bargain and never pays his debts if he can avoid it. In a few years he will be demanding the right to vote, and will insist in a share in the civic and provincial administration. But he does not assimilate and never will."

THE RESULT OF STRIKES

Prof. Goldwin Smith says that it has been rather too hastily assumed that the Japanese have thrust themselves unenvied upon British Columbia. To a considerable interest it seems that of the manufacturers, their coming was welcome because their labor is reliable which Canadian labor, owing to the strikes, is ceasing to be. In a single month it seems we had in Canada twenty-six trades disputes, affecting two hundred establishments and 6,144 workmen. The suspension of one industry often draws with it the suspension of others. The unions, originally formed to enable the workingman to negotiate on fair terms with his employers, a purpose for which they were urgently needed, are now getting beyond that mark and are assuming the character of organs of a conflict of class. They are at the same time failing internally under the influence of professional agitators, who subsist by industrial war. If this goes on, Canadian labor must soon fall in value, like any other commodity ceasing to be reliable, and give place to the Japanese or that of other lands on which more reliance can be placed. We shall be in danger of being supplanted by Japanese and Chinese products if not by Japanese and Chinese hands.

The striker himself, inasmuch as he is a consumer, is an employer, and an advance in wages, raising the cost of producing, raises the price of the products to him as well as to the rest of us. A general strike, raising the price of all the articles, would make them dear to us all, and increase the cost of living to us as well as to the members of the union. A general shortening of the hours of work, if it reduced the amount of production, which it need not do in all cases, would necessarily produce a general rise of price. The unions may strive to hold themselves apart from the community and wage war upon it in their separate interest, but they have to share its lot, and they will always find that in hurting it they are hurting themselves.

110 Years Old, He Dances at Feast

New York, Oct. 9.—Dr. Osler's theory that all men reach the height of their powers at forty years received a severe setback yesterday when Rabbi Barnett Wolnisky danced with the agility of a boy in celebration of his great-granddaughter's marriage and his one hundred and tenth birthday.

In reality the rabbi was one hundred and ten years old on July 21, but he postponed the celebration of his birthday until yesterday, when his great-granddaughter, Miss Etta Wolnisky, was married to Burnett Greenberg at his home. In the presence of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, Rabbi Wolnisky danced a famous Russian dance in celebration of the double event.

Rabbi Wolnisky was as free and easy in his motion as if he had not passed the century mark by ten years, and after he had danced for twenty minutes he displayed not the slightest sign of fatigue.

Up to ten years ago, when he retired from active church work, Rabbi Wolnisky had for more than forty-five years been in charge of synagogues on the east side.

FOR WINTER EVENINGS.

Identification a Good Game For Fiction Readers.

A good game for a company of fiction readers is called identification. It is easily arranged and never fails to "take" with intelligent people.

When the amusement is about to begin the hostess distributes among her guests large cards or strips of cardboard on which are the names of fifty characters, male and female, extracted from standard or popular novels, who must be identified.

This is done by writing opposite the name of the character the title of the novel in which it figures. Each player may have a separate list, or one list may be given to each pair of partners who work together to complete it.

In preparing a set of characters avoid selecting those which fill title roles or who are too familiar to the reader.

A good beginning for such a list would be:

Babbie ("The Little Minister").
Dinah Morris ("Adam Bede").
Nydia ("The Last Days of Pompeii").
Kate Hardcastle ("She Stoops to Conquer").
Adam Moss ("A Kentucky Cardinal").
Little Eve ("Uncle Tom's Cabin").
Blanche Amory ("Pendennis").
Rosamund Lydgate ("Middlemarch").
Sir Lucius O'Trigger ("The Rivals").
Josephine March ("Little Women").
Sancho Panza ("Don Quixote").
Edward Fairfax Rochester ("Jane Eyre").
Miss Euphemia Dundas ("Theodora of Warsaw").
Noddy Boffin ("Our Mutual Friend").
Mrs. Malaprop ("The Rivals").
Lady Teazle ("The School For Scandal").
Quilp ("Old Curiosity Shop").

According to History.

A New York man, who spends a portion of the summer each year in England, tells of an amusing incident in connection with his first visit to Richmond castle. On that occasion he was accompanied by a guide who relied for his information mainly on a guide book, which from time to time he would furtively consult if he thought the visitor was not looking his way.

"What is the height of this fine old keep?" asked the New Yorker.

"According to history," replied the guide, "it's ninety-two feet."

Similar replies were made to other questions of a like nature, each being vouchsafed with the assurance that it was "according to history."

Finally there was reached a part of the battlements where the hill on which the castle stands descends abruptly to the river.

"Pretty steep descent!" exclaimed the American.

"Yes, sir," came from the guide in his monotonous tone. "According to history, it's almost perpindicular!"

Youth In Its Golden Prime.

A calf under a year old took the championship in the individual steer class at the last international live stock show. A few years ago only the steer of age and weight would have figured among the possibilities in such a contest. "Baby beef" has become a familiar phrase. The "light hog" has pushed its way to the front. "Hothouse lamb" is no longer a great rarity.

This rising feeling for the things of youth, the striking off into a new path in animal production, may at first appear just a turn of the wheel of change, but behind the seeming fancy of the producers is solid reason. With the breaking up of the ranges the small farmers are tackling the meat producing proposition with vigor in the east and south as well as the west, and in all lines it appears to be proved that the gains in weight are made at the least expense on the young animal.

Scotch fashions, too, are now popular in beef circles, and justly, for the Scotch farmers are notable feeders of animals for beef. From the standpoint of quality and flavor Scotch fed beef holds a leading position in the most critical meat markets of the world. Scotch breeders of beef cattle encourage young stock to develop early maturing qualities, particularly in Aberdeen-Angus and Shorthorn districts. As these breeds are bred almost entirely for beef production the tendency to take on flesh rapidly and mature at an early age is regarded as the most important point to be considered.

Champion Young Angus.

The cut, original in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago, shows the champion yearling steer Andy, an Aberdeen-Angus, exhibited by the Minnesota college at the last international live stock show. Concerning the display of the Aberdeen-Angus at that time the Gazette remarked that, whether the long line of two-year-olds is considered or the yearlings or the rare lot of calves, there was a fleshiness apparent in all, a maximum of beef and a minimum of waste, that presented ready explanation of the favor in which the breed finds itself among the buyers for slaughter.
